"Serving on the Boston City Council in addition to being a representative, I see first hand the need for such a meaningful piece of legislation," he said.

Flynn said Massachusetts residents are demanding some sort of financial disclosure law and predicted one will come about through initiative petition if not through legislation.

NE scraps grain storage system

BOSTON [AP] — It looks like New England farmers will not be getting a proposed network of grain storage facilities because a joint study by UMass and UConn economists has found the project would not significantly lower feed costs.

The feasibility study carried out for the New England Regional Commission determined that the proposed storage system would trim less than one per cent from feed grain prices.

The commission had been considering a four-depot storage network so that New England feed mills could band together and order 50-to-100-car trainloads of grain at a time. This would allow them to qualify for lower rail shipment rates than the rates charged on current orders, which generally are in single-carload or three-carload lots.

The preliminary plan called for depots to be built in Fitchburg, Mass.; Willimantic, Conn.; Augusta, Maine, and St. Albans, Vt. Grain trains would have been unloaded at those four points, and the grain trucked as needed to feed mills in the area.

However, the university researchers found that the storage system, which would have cost upwards of $15 million to build and operate, would provide virtually no savings for feed companies or their customers, the farmers.

The finding has prompted the regional commission and the feed industry to press harder in a court fight against rail shipping rates, which they contend discriminate against New England.

A group called RATES, an arm of the New England Grain and Feed Council, has brought a suit against the Interstate Commerce Commission, complaining that rates from the midwest to New England are roughly double the rates for comparable distances from the midwest to the south.

The challenge rests in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C. Arguments in the case were heart in April and the court is expected to issue a ruling within the next 30 to 60 days.

David Stein, transportation director of the regional commission, said the disparity has helped southern poultry growers expand into northern markets.

"The New England chicken industry has largely lost the New York market and is struggling to maintain its share of the Boston market," he said.

Stein said the grain depot plan now appears dead but added there was a slight chance it could be revived and modified, depending on another possible development in the feed grain industry. He said there has been a rumor circulating for months that a major firm is thinking of building a large grain elevator at a North Atlantic port for its export business.

If the elevator was built in New England, he said, it might be able to handle trainloads of grain not only for overseas but for its own region. However, Stein cautioned he knew of nothing to substantiate the report.

"If a major company is going forward with this, then it's doing it very quietly," he remarked.

Kissinger urges more fighter jets for Israel

WASHINGTON [AP] — Former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger urged yesterday that the administration increase sales to Israel in its Mideast jet fighter package amid growing signs that a compromise along that line was under discussion.

Kissinger appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which decided to delay until today a planned closed session for further discussion of the administration plan to sell fighters to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Asked about the significance of the postponement of the private session, Senate Minority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., replied, "you might assume something was going to happen."

Despite indications that a compromise was in the offing, White House press secretary Jody Powell said at a briefing that President Carter "made it quite clear that the proposals before Congress will not be altered."

But he added: "What is possible outside those limits remains to be seen," an indication that the administration does not preclude commitment for an additional sale of jet fighters to Israel separate from the sales proposals already before Congress.

State Department, spokesman Hodding Carter refused to disclose details of negotiations underway between congressional leaders and the administration, but noted changes in the numbers of planes for each country could be made in the present package if the White House and Congress consent.

Elsewhere, Saudi Arabian oil minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani said his country does not see a direct linkage between Saudi oil sales and the purchase of the U.S. fighters. But he said it would be "naive" to think that a rejection of one would not affect the other.

The former secretary of state strongly endorsed increasing the number of planes slated for Israel.

He said the 75 F-16s and 15 F-15 jet fighters were "at the very lowest end of the spectrum" of the numbers discussed during the Ford administration.

"The numbers requested while I was in office were several orders of magnitude above this," Kissinger added.

In addition, Kissinger said that the earlier figures were not discussed in the context of sales to Arab nations.

"Israel did not have any reason to anticipate this, which is one reason I feel the Israeli part of the package should be augmented," he added.

While advocating a larger number of jets for Israel, Kissinger also endorsed the sales to Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

He said the sale of 50 F-5s — a less sophisticated plane than the F-15s and F-16s — to Egypt was a symbolic gesture that "can only have a marginal effect on the military balance.

B's skating uphill against Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA [AP] — In case you're wondering how the Philadelphia Flyers managed to beat the Boston Bruins Sunday night, it's because the Bruins were skating uphill.

If you don't believe that one, just ask Boston defenseman Brad Park.

After the Flyers' 3-1 victory had reduced the Bruins' lead in the National Hockey League best-of-seven semifinal playoff series to 2-1, Park insisted that the ice had helped the Flyers.

"I don't want to say the Spectrum ice is the worst in the league because it isn't," said Park. "But it's different. The ice helps the Flyers an awful lot."

Park tried to explain the so-called ice problem.

"Most ice that's bad is chippy because they have to take it in and out frequently," Park said. "The problem here is that the floor is uneven. The pipes can't freeze ice equally."

Park said that in the second half of each period the game slows down.

"And that helps the Flyers especially if they're ahead, because we're skating uphill," Park said.

Park went on to explain that because of the weird ice the players have to snap in instead of tap the puck.

"You can't glide here. You have to work hard to move. I'm glad we have four games in Boston," Park concluded.

Don't laugh. Flyers' coach Fred Shero, who hadn't heard the Boston player's comment, also criticized the ice.

"There was something wrong with the ice tonight," Shero said during his post game news conference Sunday. "It looked like both teams were slow. But neither was slow. It was just the ice."

Shero said he didn't know what the problem was, but he indicated he intended to find out.

The Flyers' Bill Barber brushed off the home ice theory, despite the fact that Boston won its two games at home and the Flyers their only victory in Philadelphia.

"I don't think the home ice means all that much," said Barber who scored the Flyers third goal Sunday night. "We knew that starting with the semifinal we wouldn't have the home ice advantage."

Barber insisted that the Bruins were just as aggressive as they were in Boston.

"They had us running around pretty good," said Barber. "We were fortunate that Bernie Parent made some great stops."

Then Barber added a postscript: "Maybe our rink is larger and does work to our advantage."

Uphill or downhill, chippy or smooth, fast or slow, advantage or disadvantage, the teams will be on the Spectrum ice tonight for the fourth game of the series.

Sox smack KC

The Boston Red Sox won their sixth straight game with an 8-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals at Fenway Park last night. The key hit for Boston was a two-out three-run homer by Carl Yastrzemski off Al Hrabosky in the seventh inning.

Duffers finish 5th in NE's

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Men's golf team, which finished fifth in a field of 12 at the Salem St. Tourney last weekend, finished in the same position at the New England Division I Championship, played Thursday and Friday at the always tough Yale C.C. in New Haven.

The host team, Yale, which plays very well on its home course, won the tournament with a 636 total, 38 shots in front of the Minutemen and a comfortable 18 strokes atop second place Dartmouth. The Crusaders of Holy Cross finished third at 663, while URI took fourth at 669.

For the Minutemen, the tournament was a frustrating end to a frustrating season. The linksters were only able to put together two sub-80 rounds in the tournament, and were never really in the race for the title.

The low scorer for the Minutemen was team captain Jim McDermott, who ended a fine season on a high note, finishing 78,82,160. The 160 total tied him for second alternate with Matt Zitto of Providence, and put him under consideration for an invitation to the Nationals to be played in June.

For the rest of the Minutemen, it was a very long tournament. Vic Lahteine finished 87,81,168; Jeff Orr went 76,85,171, Chuck Dempsey wound up 79,93,172 and Marty Hunt finished with a pair of 86's for a 172.

To the surprise of no one, the low medalist in the tournament was Yale's standout Peter Terravainen, who finished 76,74,150, four shots better than Joe Henley of Dartmouth who finished second, at 77,77,144. Dave Castellani of Holy Cross finished third at 83,72,155.

Castellani's 72 was the low round of the tournament, as severe extremes of weather made low numbers very tough to come by. On Thursday, high temperatures and dry conditions made the fairways and greens very hard and tough to hold. On Friday, driving rains and vicious winds, at times gusting to 35 MPH, made scoring difficult.

An indication of how tough the course played was that out of 120 rounds played, only 12 were below 80

JV's fuel varsity fire

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

The primary and often sole motive of any team in any sport is to win. Vince Lombardi has been immortalized for saying, "Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing," and we as fans have in turn come to expect the teams we follow to "play to win". It is therefore interesting in its deviance, and refreshing in its uniqueness, to come upon a coach and a team whose major objective does not lie in the winning of ball games.

"My job," said JV baseball coach Jim Bedard, "is to produce good varsity baseball players. If we go out there and play well, I don't care if we lose every game of the season."

The JV baseball program is by no means typical of UMass junior varsity teams. In football, for instance, the JV squad exists so that players who may not be quite good or ready enough to participate in varsity contests may be able to see some gridiron action. The JV soccer program is cast in pretty much the same mold.

JV baseball, however, is an entirely different case. Players are handled, not as varsity also-rans, but as potential and legitimate contenders for the varsity squad.

"When one of my players gets called up to the varsity," said Bedard, "it makes me feel good. I've done my job. In the three years that I've been coaching JVs here, I've had 17 players called up the varsity team. That tells me that I'm doing a good job."

This "farm team" philosophy does not always go over well with the players. Bedard carries a 25-man roster, and all of them see considerable playing time, regardless of the game situation.

"It's tough on these guys. All of them are coming from high schools where they were the best players on their teams, where the emphasis is on winning. All of them want to make varsity, where you have to win, too, and here I am getting them ready," Bedard said.

The baseball team does not recruit, per se, so most of Bedard's charges come from Massachusetts high schools, and in great number, as Bedard estimates that he cuts "50 high school stars a year."

The emphasis in building a JV team is on natural ability. Thus, while one player may hit for a higher average than another, the natural swing, the ability to perhaps some day become a good varsity performer overrides any statistics sheet or batting titles.

Bedard cites the case of infielder Frank Letizia, who hit over .400 as a freshman and is lower this season, but has nonetheless become a better hitter.

"Most of his (Letizia's) hits were coming on little flares and loopers to the opposite field," Bedard explained. "Now he hits the ball hard. He's pulling line drives all over the place."

Partly because he's trying to get his players experience, and partly because he "likes to see the bat moving," Bedard is an advocate of letting his hitters go after the 3-0 pich. "It's the only pitch that the pitcher is going to give you. At any other time, you're hitting his pitch."

Even with his main emphasis on developing talent for Dick Bergquist's varsity team, Bedard's team has been winning, now 14-9-1. Pitchers Chuck Thompson and Mark Brown appear to be certain varsity standouts, and hard-hitting Mark Litano has already seen varsity action this year.

Undefeated Peters to face Springfield today

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team will have a sneak preview of the Easterns today when it faces second ranked Springfield away at 2:30 p.m. The Chiefs mark the end of the regular season for the varsity and junior varsity.

On the mound will be Sue Peters, now 6-0, to challenge Springfield. Kathy O'Connell posts the earlier 4-3 win over the Chiefs as the Minutewomen scrapped to break the 3-3 deadlock with Pat Oski scoring the tie breaker.

Catcher Beth Collins broke her little finger in softball action over the weekend and is out for the season. The curly-haired sophomore has had her share of problems — namely three broken fingers in little over a month.

Sue DiRocco received a crash course on catching for play today from fellow co-captain Meliones in practice yesterday.

Although the varsity is journeying to the Regionals, the junior varsity has to hang up the spikes after the Springfield game. Jean Lambert's jayvees do so, only after one of the better sub-varsity seasons. The 7-3 club has won convincingly during the ten-game span with a 18-0 triumph by a Kathy O'Connell 2-hitter over Keene State.

The UMass nine showed they could win the close ones with a 13-11 decision in the first game of a doubleheader against Berkshire Community College. The jayvees blew Berkshire home in the windy second contest, 15-1, with their characteristic firepower.

Leading the hitters have been Denise Andrews, Brenda Simmons, Beth O'Connell and a consistent Michelle Andrews. The best bunter on the squad is Elaine Contant, while Ellen Korelitz at shortstop has potential to make varsity next year, noted Lambert.

Similar to most teams, the players never lack nicknames. Simmons earned "Scoop" for her fine vacuum cleaner-like pickups of anything movable around third. "Stretch" O'Connell is well-suited with her height and first base playing. Betsy "Sly" Masse, otherwise known as "Beulah," attained her nickname with her clever plays.

The outfield has been well defended noted Lambert, with Denise Andrews' hustle in left, Fern Lee's outstanding but unorthodox style in right, and Chris Kelly is "all over the place" covering center.

The pitching burden has been shouldered by O'Connell and relief specialist Gail Carter.

Mary Jo Forbes is a freshman with "a lot of potential," commented Jo McGowan, former jayvee coach.

Curt P. Kohlberg

Minutemen overlooked

The NFL draft was held last Tuesday and Wednesday, and 312 college seniors from over 700 college football programs were chosen by the twenty-six NFL clubs as hopeful and probable additions to their teams. But as I systematically reviewed each teams' choices, I felt that something was missing.

Sure, your big names like Earl Campbell, Ross Browner and Ken MacAfee all were drafted in the first round, and your All-Americans like Chris Ward, Wes Chandler, and James Lofton were also tapped within the first twenty-six picks.

But as the results of each of the twelve rounds slowly surfaced, I realized what was missing. Where were the seniors from the University of Mass at Amherst that led the Minutemen to their best season in the last four campaigns? Were there some sorts of typographical errors in the teletype? To my dismay there were not. At first it seemed that time had finally run out on the Minutemen seniors.

"Geez," I thought to myself. "All that hard work, the double sessions, and look at what it brought them as far as a career is concerned."

After I realized that I was still talking to myself, I splashed on some Aqua-Velva (I want to be like Pete Rose) and decided to get some answers to these questions before those guys with the white jackets arrive to take me away.

I finally located Bob Pickett, the new head coach of the football program here at the Amherst campus (and probably one of the nicest guys in the world to talk to), and proceeded to try to find some answers about why the Minutemen were apparently overlooked. Here are some of the "exciting excerpts":

Q: "Coach, what is your immediate reaction to the way the NFL skimmed over the Minutemen's seniors?"

A: "Well Curt, I think that the draft is very unpredictable after the first day (six or seven rounds). We had some excellent ballplayers, and frankly I'm surprised that none of them were drafted.

Q: "Who were the standouts from last year's squad that you thought had the best chances of being drafted?"

A: "Well, all of our seniors contributed to last year's success. But if I had to single them out, I'd have to say that Billy Coleman (rb), Ross Schubarth (ot), Kevin Cummings (te), John Willis (dt), and Moses Williams (te) all have the opportunity (pro potential), so don't cross them off any lists even though they weren't drafted. Also, forgive me if I overlooked anyone.

Q: "What are some of the factors involved in the pro scouting process?

A: "The most important factors are speed, size, height, previous injuries and especially the intensity with which they practice.

Q: "Of the teams that you faced last year, which players of those teams showed you that they were of pro potential?"

A: "Mike Kreiker, the quarterback from Lehigh, was drafted by New Orleans in the fifth round. I think that says something about his potential. He might not throw the ball as pretty as Leamon Hall of Army or Ken Smith of Boston College, but he throws a lot of touchdown passes, and I'm sure that impressed the scouts. Also, he has an excellent attitude towards the game, and that can only help him."

Q: "What do you think of Jeff Allen's (quarterback of UNH) chances of making the Dallas Cowboys as the third-string QB behind Staubach and White? (He was signed to a free-agent contract, but wasn't drafted.)

A: "I think that he has a slim chance of making that club. The fact that he didn't face very stiff competition can't help him very much."

Even though none of the Minutemen were drafted, it doesn't mean that none of them will ever play pro ball. Each of the twenty-six NFL clubs holds a free-agent camp, and many of the Minutemen have been invited to try out at various camps. For instance: Billy Coleman is going to Atlanta, Phil Puopolo is probably going to the Giants camp, Ross Schubarth is heading for Cleveland (I'm sure Dick MacPherson had something to do with this) and Moses Williams is heading towards San Diego. I wish them all and their colleagues the best of luck, and hope that in the future Robert Pickett and his staff can help his seniors by promoting his talent and enabling them to get the exposure they need to be drafted.

"It's not an easy task," Pickett explained, "when the scouts visit every school all the coaches tell them that their players are pro material. The scouts hear the same things all over the country. They have to decide for themselves."

That is one of the truest statements in college sports. But it doesn't mean he can't try. And I'm sure that Bob Pickett will try his hardest.

was batting .120 after the first 14 games of the year.

— Charlie Ciccone made a genius of Bergquist when he pinch hit for Czerapowicz in the fifth and hit a home run to break a 4-4 tie and send UMass on its winning way.

"Charlie doesn't have a high average," Bergquist noted, "but he's made his hits count." Ciccone has clouted four round trippers.

— Mike Stockley, the vastly underrated second baseman, went three-for-five and knocked in the first Minuteman run. The man with the tremendous range in the field has improved his average to .235 and has now driven in 14 runs on only 20 hits.

— Mike McEvilly hit safely in his fourth straight game to put his average at .331. McEvilly also drove in a run.

— Leo Kalinwoski, the hitting machine at third, banged out two hits and walked twice. Emulating his teammates, Kalinwoski catapulted his batting into the mid-.300s.

Sweet breaks record

Apes over Spfld, 22-3

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Ahhh, there's nothing like a pick-up game to relax the troops.

Having arrived in Springfield five minutes into game time thanks to the Collegians' idea of an automobile (a beat up Maverick), the Gorillas at least waited that long before this reporter showed up. They then preceeded to dismantle the Springfield squad piece by piece on route to an easy 22-3 victory.

Had the game been scheduled for Amherst the fans on 'the Hill' would've seen a lot of new things: Norm Smith, Mike Gongas and Billy Anderson relieving starting goalie Eric Banhazl of his job; defenseman (co-captain) Rich Donovan playing attack, as did Don Goldstein — and a host of different combinations of Gorillas playing out of their usual positions.

More important, what the UMass fans did miss was Brooks Sweet's exhibition that lead to a new UMass scoring record. Sweet scored six goals in the game giving him one more than the old record of 55 goals in a season — held by Frank Garahan — coach of the National-bound women's lacrosse team.

The game was held up — with the help of a UMass timeout — while the team rushed on the field to congratulate the junior transfer student. After his record-breaking goal, Sweet watched the remainder of the game from sidelines.

On the record breaking play Sweet attempted an over-the-shoulder the shot that went wide of the post. But Pit Martin scooped up the rebound, flipped it back in front to Sweet, and into the strings it went.

Throughout the game Springfield played pitiful — looking even worse than Vermont did against UMass (and the Catamounts only lost 24-7). From the Gorillas standpoint, it was only a matter of how much they'd defeat the Chiefs by.

A sluggish first period ended with the Gorillas up only 3-0 on goals by Skip Vosburgh, Eddie Murray, and Mike Gongas. The Minutemen then broke out with nine scores in the second quarter to further put the game out of hand.

Fran Yung lit the lights with his long range shot finding the top of the goal to put UMass up 4-1. Not only was this all UMass needed, but it was only the beginning (only just a start) of a string of UMass goals (nine unanswered) which led to a halftime lead for Garber's boys of 12-1.

It might have been a more interesting game had the Chiefs been able to close the gap some. But with poor passing, sad defense, and shaky stick-handling it was almost apparent that Springfield would've had a tough time with the UMass JV squad.

In essence, UMass was way too good to bother with Springfield on a competitive level. The game allowed everyone on the squad a chance to get into the action and have some fun.

And that's what college sports are for, right?

You tell me.

Postal service... Not to forget the stats — Lenny Caffrey not only hit the post once but scored... Pete McCarty took a shot but it was wide... Gongas made two decent saves... Anderson had one... Mike Lettera scored on a super jump shot... astroturf is o.k....

Batmen blast UConn

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Ct. — Rebound is normally a basketball term, but it also can be applied to what the UMass baseball team yesterday proved it could do.

Coming off a 12-1 wipeout at the hands of Providence, the Minutemen turned their bats into bludgeons and blasted UConn, 13-6, here in their final away game of the year.

The win gives UMass a sweep of its three games against the Huskies this season, and enhances the Minutemen's chances for an ECAC playoff berth.

"It's a jumbled arrangement right now," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said of the post-season picture. "I can't speak for the other people on the committee, but we've played everyone tough, outside of two games."

The Minutemen, now 18-18 (16-10 Northern), reached .500 with the triumph for the first time since they were 2-2. But perhaps more importantly, they displayed a devastating team offense since they blasted out 18 hits against Wesleyan and Vermont way back in March and April.

UMass's offense produced 19 hits — the most of the season — while battering around four UConn pitchers. Strangely, 12 batters also fanned. Meanwhile Doug Welenc picked up his seventh win and complete game while scattering five hits.

"He hung in there," Bergquist said. "The UConn coaches were impressed, although I know he's been sharper. He used his head because he knew he didn't have it all today."

Welenc struck out nine and walked four, but two of the six Huskies' runs were unearned. It was high time for a Welenc laugher, since two of his three losses were directly caused by errors.

And ah, that offense. Everyone in the starting lineup but John Czerapowicz hit safely at least once, while several players maintained personal streaks. Among the notable:

— Ed Skribiski appears to be fully back from his early season miseries as he four-for-six to up his average 20 points to .268. He also drove in two runs. During his hitting streak which has now reached four games, Skribiski has collected 10 hits. He Winners. That is the way to describe the Women's Crew Team as they returned from the New England Open Regatta held Saturday on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester.

Although the morning weather threatened cold and rain, the clouds soon blew away and the day was warm and sunny with no wind, a perfect racing day. The only thing to cause concern was that the course was 2000 meters long compared to the usual 1500 meters.

Qualifying heats were held in the morning for all classes except the Women's JV Eights which only had four applicants. The first heat was the Varsity Fours in which UMass failed to qualify after falling behind in the first five strokes of the race.

Although the women made a valiant effort, passing Holy Cross and catching up to Worcester Polytechnical Institute, they lost by 1.1 seconds.

Next on the program was the JV Eight who stormed their final heat with a winning time of 7:36.9 minutes over Connecticut College (7:50.2), UNH (8:03.9), and Holy Cross (8:21.0). For its efforts the crew, coxed by freshman Paula Condon and stroked by junior Laura Love, were awarded the Joseph Garofolo Cup.

The varsity, having won their qualifying heat in the morning against Amherst and Smith Colleges by 0:22.0 and 1:19.2 respectively, had little doubt as to its ability to win the finals.

At 4:40 p.m., following the precedent set by the JV's, the varsity rowed a tight race winning with a time of 7:12.7 against MIT (7:21.8), Connecticut College (7:28.9), Wesleyan (7:30.2) and Amherst (7:59.9).

This victory netted the women their first trophy in two years, the Pat Bisceglia Cup.

Next Sunday the Oarswomen will be meeting their toughest competition in their final race of the season as they travel to Onota Lake in Pittsfield to compete in the Eastern Sprints.

The Sprints are the highest level of competition for women's crews on the East Coast. UMass will face such powers as Yale, Wisconsin, Rutgers and Princeton.

Coach Debbie Ayars said she wouldn't make any predictions on the Sprints, but is confident that UMass will do well and earn a position in the finals.

Several members of this year's crew will then be continuing on an individual basis to the Nationals in Seattle during June. These women are: Leslie Bellows (coxswain), Cindy Hector, Ginny Peebles, Deb Quinn, Maureen O'Brien, Julie Eggleston, K.C. Dietz, Maria Melone, and Jan Palchikoff (stroke of the '77 quad).

Shooting the bull

It's late in the semester. Papers due two weeks ago will have to be turned in soon. But there's always that 'incomplete option' plan. Columnists in the Mass. Daily Collegian will write their farewell rendition of their days here at UMass-Amherst (see Friday's upcoming Edelstein column). Those that aren't leaving will 'attempt' to write a relevant column (see Zack's tomorrow). Me? I'm just gonna shoot the bull around for a while — rather than be controversial.

How can you tell the difference on this campus between the fair-weather fan and the diehard? The latter will sit out the contest to see what the final outcome is — the former will leave when it is apparent UMass has lost the contest.

Is it only a matter of time before UMass abolishes its hockey program? With the J.V. squad already gone, unless UMass is able to stay on a fairly competitive level, I could see this happening in the distant future. It'd be sorry to see UMass minus a sport.

How far can a sportswriter over step his boundaries in the world of journalism? Is it right for said person to express an opinion of a team which could affect the team's performance? Should the team even concern itself with the story, and just play the game? Case in point: This reporter did a critique on the lacrosse team last week. While picking out the bad things wrong with the team, the good things were omitted. People following the team seem to forget the lacrosse team does as good as it does without the aid of recruiting funds. Thus players come here either after talking with the coach or through contact with a player already on the team — and having heard of its success that way.

While people may complain about the lack of tennis courts on this campus two things should be kept in mind: Tennis has been in a boom, which in itself would make it hard to keep up with demand. And two, be thankful for at least having the courts we do (Note: There are some decent indoor courts on the Cape for those headed southeast for the summer).

Is sports the best department on the Collegian staff? Well, in my unbiased opinion, yes. More partiers, etc. Unofficial statistics show the greater portion of the campus folds the Collegian with the sports on the outside — presumably to read first. The comics, however, are close behind sports in readership. Does this say something for this campus?

Is it true that people who know all the trivia about sports can't play anything (though they think they can)? Is this a rhetorical question?

Did you know that women's lacrosse has no field boundaries? Only natural boundaries stop play (omitting penalties) — i.e., streets and passing cars, rivers, and trout headed upstream, etc. Seriously though, women's lacrosse is a whole different game than the men's version (no helmets for starters).

"How long have you been here" dept. — Do you remember when the football team played a post season game vs. U. Cal-Davis in the Boardwalk Bowl? How about the last time the UMass basketball team won an NIT contest? How about the year snow on the IM fields forced intramural softball into a shortened season? Do you remember when the 'Rocketship Library' wasn't opened?

Good-bye section: ... (If you don't know me skip this section, and read Curt's column inside) ... gonna miss writing for this paper ... and lacrosse kids, trips, hotels, etc. ... basketball in Boyden ... and friends I'll probably not see after this month ... both Murphs and Brandywine-Townhouse crew ... UMass Board of Trustees chairman Joseph P. Healey said yesterday "it is possible that the board could reach a decision" on a new president of the university at their meeting this Monday.

Both Healey and trustee Stephen G. Breyer, head of the presidential search committee, denied reports by the Associated Press and a Boston newspaper yesterday that the trustees were meeting to discuss the candidacy of the Harvard Law School Associate Dean James Vorenburg only.

"There is no particular candidate to be discussed," said Breyer, "We are meeting to discuss the entire issue."

Healey said the board was meeting because there is "a growing feeling among the board that it ought to come to grips with the selection of a president."

"I personally hope it would be resolved soon," said Healey, "We should make a selection before our candidates make other commitments for next year."

Healey said the board was convening to hear the report and they would take whatever action "they thought was indicated."

Breyer said there could not be a leading candidate because the committee had not come up with a final choice.

"We are considering a number of candidates," said Breyer.

Previously it had been rumored that the search committee had narrowed the field to five candidates but Breyer and other committee members had denied the reports.

Yesterday a spokesman for Governor MIchael S. Dukakis, himself a trustee, confirmed the reports saying the governor had received a list of five final names from the committee.

Newly elected UMass-Amherst student-trustee Robert Dion said yesterday that as far as he knew the trustee meeting was only to hear the search committee report and to consider all candidates.

"I can definitely say that Vorenburg is not a unanimous choice," said Dion, "I'm familiar with a number of other trustees who have other first choices."

Healey said there are still a number of candidates being considered.

According to sources, the five final candidates are: Vorenberg, Brooklyn Assistant Vice-President Marilyn Gittell, Charles H. Foster of Yale, David Knapp of Cornell, and UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Police discover Moro's body

ROME [AP] — The bloody, bullet-riddled body of Aldo Moro was found chained and stuffed in the back of a parked car in downtown Rome yesterday, climaxing an ordeal of terror that stunned Italy and the world.

The Red Brigades, flaunting to the end their attack on the "heart of the state," pumped at least 11 bullets into the back of his head and his chest, then left the former premier's body in a stolen maroon Renault at the very center of Italian political power — on a narrow, cobblestoned sidestreet between the party headquarters of the Communists and Moro's Christian Democrats.

The discovery left the nation grief-stricken and fearful. Millions of Italians poured into streets and piazzas in a massive display of unity.

But Moro's embittered family, which had pleaded vainly with the Christian Democrat government to bargain with his terrorist kidnappers for his life, issued a statement ruling out a state funeral or other official mourning ceremonies.

"The family locks itself up in silence and demands silence," it said. "History will pass judgment on the life and death of Aldo Moro."

From captivity, Moro himself had appealed in handwritten letters for his Christian Democrats party to deal with the terrorists. Facing death, he requested in a letter two weeks ago that no government or party official attend his funeral.

World leaders from President Carter to Queen Elizabeth II condemned the murder of the man considered Italy's most influential politician, the leading candidate for president and architect of a historic agreement between the church-backed Christian Democrats and the largest Communist party in the West.

Carter called it a "contemptible and cowardly act." He sent a letter of sympathy to Moro's widow.

Premier Giulio Andreotti called an emergency Cabinet meeting and President Giovanni Leone scheduled an address to the nation.

Thousands of police mounted a massive new manhunt for the Red Brigade killers who abducted Moro on March 16, slaying his five police bodyguards, and "sentenced" him to death for the "anti-proletarian" policies of his Christian Democrat Party, rulers of Italy for three decades.

The body, clad in the dark gray suit Moro wore the day of his abduction and wrapped in a blue overcoat and red blanket, was found on Via Michelangelo Caetani, a 200-yard-long street in one of Rome's busiest districts.

It was hunched over in the luggage space behind the rear seat of the Renault hatchback. Moro's hands and feet were chained. Police said he had been shot — once in the back of the head and 10 or 11

The clock that time passed by

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

In the wake of all the so-called 'heavy news' that has inundated the news pages of late, little everyday idiosyncracies of campus life have gone either unnoticed or regretfully ignored. One of these concerning the old chapel clock was brought to this reporter's attention just yesterday while on a routine coffee fetch from Collegian Exile Headquarters in Goodell to the Campus Center Coffee Shop. During this excursion, while trudging along in a hypnotic trance mumbling, "integration, integration," I was roused by a good friend.

"Hey Schmuck! How are ya doin'?" (his usual greeting)

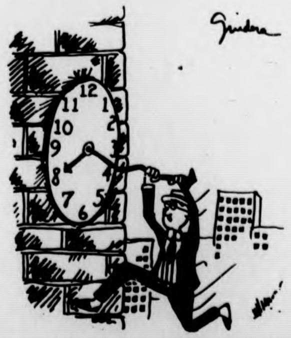
"Not bad, Schmuck. (my usual response) What's up?"

"The Old Chapel clock. Have ya seen it?"

"No, I hadn't noticed. I've been occupied with work lately. What's wrong with the clock?"

"The time," he said. "The time is wrong. It's running 45 minutes slow. You're a reporter, who don't you look into it?"

Immediately, like hearing the Pavlovian bell, my primeval journalistic juices began to flow. Luckily, I was wearing a lobster big.



After some lengthy and feverish investigative reporting, I managed to locate a phone and speak to a surprised Mr. Clint Jarvis from the electrical department of the Physical Plant.

According to Jarvis, the clock's problems must have begun a week ago Sunday, when the clocks were pushed ahead one hour to account for the switch from Eastern Standard Time to Eastern Daylight Savings Time.

Jarvis said the antique clock, which runs off the master clock at the power plant, is only capable of handling 15 minute time corrections automatically. Therefore, according to Jarvis, a physical plant employee will ascend the clock tower early this morning to manually set the correct time.

So, for those who care about the right time and being at the right place at the right time, fear not. For unless Quasimodo lurks in the dark abysmal shadows of its tower, the Old Chapel clock will display the correct time today.

SW explodes!

Southwest Residential Area exploded last night in an exchange of firecrackers and flaming rolls of toilet paper thrown from high rises while thousands watched from the courtyard and their rooms.

Several students also streaked naked through the crowd. Another student rappelled down from the sixth floor of John Adams dormitory.

There was no apparent cause for the outburst around 11:30 p.m., but some said they were celebrating the Boston Bruins victory against the Philadelphia Flyers in the Stanley Cup hockey playoffs.

Shouting matches between dormitory residents were also reported in Central Residential Area.

Toward Tomorrow Fair set

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

The third annual Toward Tomorrow Fair will be held June 16, 17, and 18 at UMass around the campus pond. The theory behind the fair is one of a "living Whole Earth Catalog", according to fair co-chairman and Summer Session Director Alan Ashton.

Wind, solar, and wood energy, health, environmental protection, human rights, education, and aquaculture and agriculture will be the focus of hundreds of exhibits, presentations, and working demonstrations.

Barry Commoner, author of "The Closing Circle", will deliver the fair's keynote speech. Other speakers will include futurist, scientist, and UMass Scholar in Residence R. Buckminster Fuller, solarists Bruce Anderson, and Denis Hayes, and former Secretary of the Interior Stuart Udall.

Folksinger Pete Seeger will give a benefit concert for the fair June 15 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

National Public Radio will broadcast the fair's major lectures, according to World Game Co-ordinator Frank McLaughlin.

The idea for a fair grew out of UMass' 1976 Bicentennial celebrations, says Ashton. But instead of looking backwards to Bicentennial history, we're looking forward, he said.

"We hoped to bring in people associated with the Whole Earth Catalog," Ashton said. People who manufactured tools, and came up with ideas for more humane lifestyles; environmentalist, and futurist thinkers, he said.

"The fair was originally intended as a one time deal, but was so successful we decided to continue it last year's attendance was 30,000, said Ashton. Our fair is more educationally than commercially oriented unlike many similar fairs taking place across the country, he said.

We have such a potential here, said Ashton, so many good student and faculty resources. "This is a very classy program," he said.

The emphasis, style, and format of consequent fairs must change, or it will lose its impact, says Ashton. He suggested human rights, and education as possible themes for proceeding fairs.

This year's fair will be held in cooperation with the ninth annual international World Game Workshop, devised by R. Buckminster Fuller. Begun by Fuller in the late sixties at Southern Illinois University, the World Game is a methodology for exploring the world's natural and human resources, and devising ways to use these resources, according to Ashton.

Exhibits of interest to children such as ice cream making, kite building, and live animal demonstrations will also be part of the fair. Infant and pre-school child care will be available.

Tickets will be sold in advance, and during fair days. Admission is $4 per day for adults, and $3 per day for students. Children under 12 will be admitted free, and two and three day passes are available at reduced rates. Further information is available at Toward Tomorrow, 102 Hasbrouck.

UM class court convicts Zamora in murder trial

By CLAUDE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

The reenactment of the Ronnie Zamora trial reached a guilty verdict of first degree murder last night in the Campus Center. Zamora, accused of shooting a 83-year-old lady, blamed the murder case on his excess watching of television violence.

"The Ronald Zamora case was the first case in history where murder was blamed on television violence," said Communication Studies Professor Brian Fontes. "This case witnessed the legal ramifications of television violence and its influence on the viewing public."

Communication Studies students played the role of judges, jury, prosecution, defense, and expert key witnesses. During the real trial in Miami, testimony by experts on the effects of TV programming content on the viewer was not allowed to be heard by the jury.

However, by integrating earlier research on the social impacts of television and other forms of communication, students included testimony of key experts in Communication.

"It was a good learning experience," said prosecution Lawyer David Adams. "Being involved in such a significant trial, doing intense research, and then reenacting the trial with a "live" audience proved to be a personal experience," he said.

Supporting Ronnie Zamora, the defense blamed the shooting murder on hundreds of television viewing hours of violent shows. The defense said Zamora was not guilty by reason of insanity due to "prolonged, intense, involuntary, subliminal, television intoxication.

"The influence of 10 to 12 television viewing hours per day was Zamora's television intoxication," said defense attorney Peter Williamson. "Coupled with a violent child background, television had a significant affect on Zamora's actions."

Through violence presented by psychiatrists and key witnesses, the prosecution proved that Zamora was guilty of first degree murder, refuting the insanity due to "television intoxication" argument.

After a jury deliberation of 15 minutes the anxious crowd of approximately 70 people heard the verdict of "guilty" rendered by Judge John Nedvins.

Professor Brian Fontes was pleased, saying that "Students gained a practical experience in the Communication Field."

Video-taped by television station WGBY channel 57, the reenactment will be shown Friday, May 12 at 9 p.m.

Dating back to June 4, 1977, the Zamora case originated in Miami, Florida. Zamora

Festival to begin June 29

The Leonard Bernstein Festival of American Music will begin here on June 29 with the Broadway musical, "West Side Story".

The musical, a modern retelling of Shakespeare's story of "Romeo and Juliet" will be performed four times from June 29 to July 3 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The festival will run through July 23, featuring concerts by such renowned artists as Woody Herman, Eugene Fodor, Maynard Ferguson, Lukas Foss, and Thad Jones. Many of these artists will give workshops throughout the festival.

The event is being presented by UMass in appreciation of the work of musician Leonard Bernstein, a native of Massachusetts. Much of the music to be performed during the festival was composed by Bernstein.

According to Festival Coordinator Alan Light, "It is our hope that the Bernstein festival will become an annual to the summer cultural life of Western New England."

Tickets for the performances are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Feminist plays premiere

Two original comic plays written by feminists will premiere this weekend at Hampden Student Center in Southwest.

The staging and production of the one act plays are a combined effort of Amherst area women from all walks of life ranging from homemakers, students, and professionals. The youngest is a 12 yr. old student from Springfield to the oldest, who is a 41-year-old Amherst psychologist.

"The Haunting of Terry J.," written by Sarah Alleman of Amherst, is an occult thriller with a comic twist, centering on a militant feminist who is possessed by the very unliberated spirit of a 19th century southern belle. The show is being directed by Lis Brook and produced by Karen Soltesz, both of Northampton.

"Just An All Girl Band" by Eileen Stewart of Amherst is a musical comedy about a non-liberated women's country western band from Tennessee which is discovered by a sharp promoter and booked into the feminist circuit.

The dress rehearsals of the two plays on Thursday and Friday will be closed "for women only." However, performances for the general public will be on Saturday and Sunday at 8 p.m. Tickets will be sold at the door.

Rape limits access

Campus unsafe for women

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

[Editors Note — this is the first part of a two part series on UMass women's fear of rape and what action administration is taking to prevent rape on campus.]

"It's not something I think about all the time. It's just like when I'm walking home at night and I begin to think maybe something could happen, maybe there's someone behind the bushes or around the corner, waiting for me."

The fears about rape expressed by an Emerson dorm freshman typifies the concerns held by many if not all UMass women. It is a nagging fear of their vulnerability to rape and a serious questioning of the safety of the campus, especially at night.

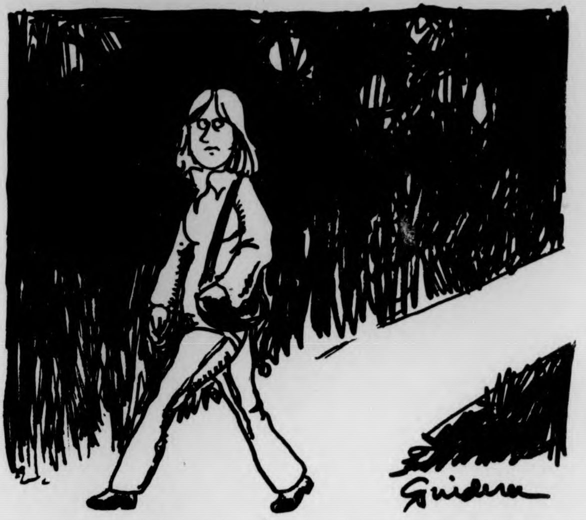
"It is unfortunate women must take the responsibility for their safety, especially if they must curtail their activities, like going to the library at night," said Chris Eagen of the Rape Task Force.

And many women do feel they must limit their activities at night.

"We all tell each other, 'don't go out alone, don't go far'." "If I'm jogging at night my boyfriend always says I have to have someone go with me," said a resident of JQA Middle.

"We are human beings," says Eagen. "We have a right to unlimited access of this campus."

Eagen said men may not really understand what it's like to be afraid when you walk around campus. "If they could only imagine what it's like, what it's like to be 5'4", 115 pounds and raised to be dependent on those who could hurt you."



Women can be in a bind, if they admit their fears, even to themselves, they may be considered over sensitive or paranoid. Yet, if they are raped, it is considered partly their fault because they may not have been acting in a way that was safe or sensible.

After the rape of the past weekends, both those officially and un-officially reported, university women are beginning to question the safety of this campus and to question the administration's understanding of their fears and needs.

"It would make you feel safe if you saw a patrolman walking around once in a while," said one woman. "I don't think the campus is safe," said a resident from Mary Lyons. "There are a lot of spots where there are hardly any lights. I don't think the administration is doing much about it. It's left up to the students."

Eagen said she does not feel the campus is made as safe as it could be. She is concerned when she sees the large expensive lights which illuminate the sports field, often when they are unused, and then sees no lighting around Munson Hall or the paths leading up to Central.

"There should be more lighting, more transportation especially on weekends, and more visible security police patrols," said Eagen.

Most importantly, said Eagen, there should be an increased awareness of rape on this campus. "There are a whole lot more rapes on this campus that are reported to the police, and especially more than are reported in the Collegian.

She encourages women to contact the administration to express their concern and to always be aware, especially when walking alone at night, of their surroundings and safety. "I only tell them this after I am sure they realize their safety should not be their responsibility, the campus should be safe."

Eagen would only talk to the Collegian if it was made clear that she feels the timing of the papers coverage of rape stems from a desire to placate the women's community and to establish a false air of raised consciousness.

The next article in this series will look at how the university currently handles safety procedures and the administration's plans to increase safety of the campus.

School cultural program asked for by Hispanics

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

The Hispanic Parents Advisory Committee and 100 supporters asked the Amherst School Committee last night to reconsider its decision not to implement a Hispanic language and cultural program in the laboratory Marks Meadow Elementary School in the UMass School of Education.

The group also urged the committee to meet with Mario Fantini, the UMass School of Education dean who supports the proposal, presented petitions and asked the school committee to take a position on reconsideration within two weeks.

The school committee members made no comments during the presentation and could not be reached for comment at home.

Earlier, 150 people, mostly Hispanics, marched from the Amherst Common to the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School a mile away, where the school committee was meeting.

The proposal, which was rejected by the school committee last month, was also supported by the Superintendent of Schools Donald Frizzle.

The group protested at that time at the Fine Arts Center while Ivan Illich spoke during the Learning Tomorrows Fair. Illich spoke on the relationship between culture and language.

The Parents Group staged a sit-in of Fantini's office after the board rejected the proposal. Fantini said he supported the proposal at this time.

The program would not require funding by the town and would be staffed by the Bilingual Education Program in the UMass School of Education. Lyn Froning, chairperson of the Cultural Diversity Advisory Group, told the committee.

Dora Fuentes, a spokesperson for the Hispanic Parents group which organized the march, told the school committee its rejection of the "enrichment" program directly contradicts a 1974 school committee policy that commits the committee to provide educational and cultural programs that reflect cultural diversity.

"All that we ask of you is that you practice what you preach," Fuentes said.

The coordinator for the parents group, Iris Zavala told the committee the parents' group is filling a complaint with the state board of Equal Education Opportunity.

The Hispanic Parents Coordinating Committee consists of the parents of 30 students, 16 of whom attend Marks Meadow School.

Marks Meadow School is a UMass laboratory school, run in conjunction with the School of Education. The school is under the jurisdiction of the School Committee, which is usually not the case of laboratory schools.

Senate to discuss budget

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate student senate tonight is scheduled to discuss the progress of negotiations between the Massachusetts Society of Professors and the administration, a motion for the resignation of senate co-presidents Bob Dion and Donald Bishop, and the budget.

The student senate plans to discuss the progress made in negotiations between the student collective bargaining task force and the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

"The senate will neither endorse nor condemn the withholding of grades by the MSP," said Brian DeLima, senate speaker, "because the MSP has sought to minimize the students' inconvenience and to maximize administrative disruption."

"Progress has been made between the student liason committee and the MSP in the issues of C.A.T.E. (Course and Teacher Evaluations), student participation on departmental committees, and the increased student role in current negotiations," he added.

The administration has only agreed to negotiate with the collective bargaining task force, but the MSP has already taken action into negotiations with the task force, DeLima said.

The motion asking for the resignation of co-presidents Bob Dion and Donald Bishop is scheduled to be discussed by the senate. The motion for resignation was made by Senator James O'Connell, at last week's senate meeting.

When asked last night for his reaction to the proposal for his resignation, co-president Bob Dion replied, "If the senate passes the motion, then I will consider resigning, but I don't think that I should resign unless the job that I set out to do is completed." If I do resign it will not be solely at the urging by the senate," he added.

Grad Senate to elect President, Vice Pres.

Editor's note: This is the third of a three-part series of candidate profiles for Graduate Student Senate officers. Elections will be held tomorrow.

By ROB STEIN
Collegian Staff

Monte Pearson is running for Vice-President of the Graduate Student Senate. He has served as senate vice-president since December and has been active in the Graduate Student's Employees Union for the past four years. He is doing graduate work in the Political Science department and is working on his dissertation on the Massachusetts budget.

Why are you running for re-election?

"I've only been vice-president since December. That's long enough to be experienced but not long enough to be burned-out or bored with the job. I would be the only remaining officer from this year's administration. I would give the senate some sort of continuity and would be a major advantage to the new incoming officers by orienting them to their new positions. There are also several issues that I've dealt with this year that I'd like to follow up on, like the bus system."

What are your feelings about the funding of the transit system?

"A lot of conflict this spring has been about the university wanting to impose a tax on the students. We wanted to keep the money as a line item on our budget. If the university just imposed a flat fee then the students would have no say about how the buses are operated. Graduate students and students in general are being taken by the Campus Center Garage which is what I spent a lot of time on this spring. The administration is using the students parking fees to pay off the debts on the garage so they don't have money to pay for the buses. The burden of paying for the transit system is left for the students. The garage doesn't even serve the students."

What is the role of the Graduate Student Senate in the university?

"We're the only official voice of graduate students on campus. We represent the graduate students' interests in dealing with all other groups on campus. We keep the graduate students from getting lost in the shuffle."

Do you have any specific goals you would like to carry out if you were elected?

"I would like the senate to become much more of an advocate than just a representative. By that I mean that we take positions and push them. We should create issues. The vice-president is a political position, not at all technical as is the treasurer. I would like to see us have more impact on the university budget process."

Gordon Pavy is currently the sole candidate for president of the Graduate Student Senate. He is a graduate student in the Labor Studies department. He is currently co-chairman of the Labor Senate of Student Caucus. He has also been involved in organizing tenants in Northampton.

Do you have any special ideas or goals you would like to see accomplished as president?

"I would like to see more of a public presence of the senate. Increase the involvement of the graduate students in general, the senate isn't one hot bed of activism, far from it."

Do you see the senate as an effectual body?

"As far as it's able to provide various organizations with funding, but it really hasn't provided too much direction to the student body, to bring them together in a unified way."

Do you see yourself being a political figure in the senate?

"Yes I suppose I am, personally, I've been involved in activist politics for a long time. I've always been willing to express my opinion on political issues."

Budget cuts expected at next Town Meeting

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Members of the Amherst Tax Payers Association tonight are expected to continue their attempts at cutting the proposed $14.5 million town budget when the annual Amherst town meeting swings into its fourth session.

Tonight's town meeting will continue discussion on Article 16, which calls for the town to adopt a comprehensive operating budget, when it reconvenes at 7:30 at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The Finance Committee has recommended a $14.5 million budget, which will bring an estimated increase of $1.50 per $1,000 valuation on the tax rate. It is this increase in the tax rate, following closely on the heels of the recent property revaluation, which has the tax payers association so fired up.

Sessions to this point have run heated and slow, frequently bogged down in procedural jockeying from town meeting members and town officials. The taxpayers association made their intent clear at the first session last Monday when they attempted to have the entire proposed budget sent back to government officials for cuts of between $200,000 and $270,000. That first attempt was defeated by a mere two votes.

Selectman William C. Atkins attempted the same course Monday night when he moved that the town meeting should send back the entire budget to the Town Manager and Finance Committee for cuts of no less than $200,000 and no more than $270,000, and return it to the town meeting no later than May 22. The motion was defeated 107-97.

Atkins and Selectman Roger C. Jacque were the only members of the Board of Selectmen to approve such a motion. The other three members of the board argued firmly that the budget should be debated in town meeting, and not sent back to town officials for cuts.

Members of the taxpayers association have contended that cuts should be made by the town officials responsible for developing the original budget, saying these officials are best qualified to decide where the cuts should come. Town officials have argued that it is the responsibility of town meeting to decide the budget, and if cuts must be made, they should decide where they will come.

Monday night the taxpayers association shifted gears after their attempt to send the entire budget back was defeated. Their new strategy entails proposed arbitrary cuts in each budget category. This strategy was the the basis for the defeat of the Finance Committee's recommended $184,634 general government portion of the town budget. Town meeting approved a motion cutting the general government budget to $186,849 and leaving it up to the Town Manager, Finance Committee and Board of Selectmen to decide where the cuts will come.

The approved motion was an amended version of an earlier motion offered by meeting member William Gurski that called for a $186,849 general government budget, but with four percent cuts coming across the board.

The next budgets scheduled for discussion are the Administration and Finance budget and the Public Safety budget.

Tugboat pilot relates rescue of downed jet

PENSACOLA, Fla. [AP] — "We were where the Lord put us," related Glenn McDonald, a tugboat pilot whose quick action saved dozens of lives after an airliner late Monday night, pancaked into the foggy waters of Escambia Bay, killing three passengers and injuring 52 others.

A shy hero, McDonald grinned self-consciously yesterday as he told of bringing his tug, "Little Mac," and its barge up to the ditched National Airlines 727 jet the night before and helping people scramble from the choppy waters.

The plane, Flight 193 out of Mobile, Ala., crashed on the western tip of Florida's Panhandle, 20 miles from the Alabama border and 50 miles from Mobile, as it made a final landing approach at the Pensacola airport, disappearing from the radar screens three miles from the runway.

The downed airliner, its tail lights still shining hours after the crash, was mired in mud with at least a third of the fuselage above the water. A flotilla of rescue boats and helicopters rushed to the scene in calm seas.

Tugboat pilot McDonald, 41, and his mate, Bill Kenney, 28, said they had heard other planes going over in the foggy darkness — then the hulk of the 727 swept down past them.

McDonald said he was off course and virtually lost when the plane came down. "If we hadn't by chance been there, many people would have died. They couldn't have made it. After they got on the barge, I know it was an hour before the boats found us," said McDonald.

The plane skipped into the 10 foot-deep bay waters just 300 yards from McDonald's tug. "I just felt, 'My God, look at that,' and then it just landed, as if it meant to," said McDonald. "It bounced and skidded a little. It made this enormous hissing sound."

The two men guided their tug and the barge it was pushing to the sinking plane.

Cries pierced the darkness.

"People were screaming, 'Help me! Save me!, when we came over. About half a dozen were atop the fuselage scrambling, crawling, sliding. The others were in the water," said McDonald.

Many passengers still clutched at life jackets. They had leaped from the downed airliner without time to put them on.

"There would be three people over here, 10 over there. I had to tell Bill to leave the three and get the 10. I had to glide the barge between people drifting in the bay and I worried that some had drifted away and would be missed when we came back around," said McDonald.

McDonald maneuvered the barge. Kenney tossed out ropes, then began diving into the fuel-slick water to help shivering survivors board the barge.

In all, 55 passengers and crewmen were rescued. Three people drowned. Sgt. William Clenny of the Florida Marine Patrol agreed. "If that barge hadn't been there, there's no telling how many would have drowned," Clenny said.

Filmmaker discusses career and 'Kudzu'

By DEBORAH BROIDE
Collegian Staff

Former Collegian reporter Marjie Short discussed her academy award nominated film "Kudzu" for a public relations class in Herter Hall yesterday.

"It is the type of subject you have to see to believe," Short said.

The documentary film concerns the impact of the Kudzu plant on the lives of the people of Georgia and Alabama. Kudzu grows wild all around the countryside, she explained.

Short said she has "never seen anything like it in her life," and added "Kudzu has become part of southern culture."

She described the film making process to the class and said that the film "all came together in the editing process."

She admitted having problems making the film, but "they were learning problems," she said. "It took a year of preparation to make the film," Short added.

Concerning the academy award nomination Short said, "the film was in the short subjects for live action category and it had to compete with dramatic films. I don't think this was fair. Kudzu has won several other awards," she said.

Short commented on the role of women filmmakers. "Film is a difficult medium and women filmmakers have advantages and disadvantages. They don't get a lot of credibility, they aren't trusted as much, and they have to feel really confident," she said.

Short doesn't consider herself a radical feminist stating "it doesn't make a difference what issues you believe in as long as you're producing. If you're not working the rest is bullshit."

Short had no comment on the current occupation of the Collegian office because she wasn't a member of the UMass community.

When Short attended UMass she wrote for a Collegian women's column called "Squaw Talk" which discussed things "like fashion, the best dressed college girl and costume designing."

Troopers raid gaming joints

DEDHAM [AP] — In a simultaneous, three-county raid, State Troopers wielding battering rams smashed down doors at 23 gambling establishments for "exclusive clientele" allegedly taking in $250 million in illegal bets annually, Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt said yesterday.

About 100 troopers commanded by Lt. Col. John O'Donovan stepped off at 7 p.m. Monday in Suffolk, Middlesex and Norfolk Counties.

In some cases, troopers burst in through the splintered doors and started taking bets on the Red Sox-Kansas City baseball game over the telephone, State Police spokesman, Capt. Harry Reddish, said.

No one was arrested, but Delahunt said subpoenas would be issued at a later date. "No refunds of your bet from the state," said Reddish.

"Given this investigation," said Delahunt, "sports betting alone in this state is probably three-quarters of a billion dollars.

Delahunt said the 23 different establishments, all in private homes or apartments, were for bookies making layoff bets and for "exclusive clientele" able to bet from $5,000 to $25,000 at a clip.

The district attorney said court-authorized telephone taps over the past six months — "Phase one," said Delahunt — detected links with other betting establishments in New York, Miami and Las Vegas.

Delahunt said the gaming rooms did a daily business of from $50 to $80,000.

"That's conservative, in my judgment," he said.

Troopers seized telephones, lists of bettors on "flash paper" which ordinarily disintegrates when crumbled and other gambling paraphernalia, the police said.

Delahunt said he is requesting Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti and the Chief Justice of the Superior Court to convene a special Norfolk Grand Jury only to hear evidence from the raids and prior investigation.

Police seized the undisclosed contents of a safety deposit box yesterday morning at Home Owner's Federal Savings & Loan Association, Newton, in connection with the gambling raids, said Delahunt.

Troopers used rams to batter down the doors because they wanted to catch occupants by surprise, said the district attorney.

"If you knock on the door," he said, "the first thing your're going to hear is the toilet flushing.

"This raid is going to hurt. It is going to be tougher to place bets. Street bookies are going to have second thoughts about laying off bets and they are going to think twice about taking action."

Police raided premises in Brookline, Chestnut Hill, Quincy, Stoughton, Randolph, Newton, Medford, Boston, East Boston and Hyde Park.

Mountaineering #5.

REGULATION GARB

You, a faithful follower of this space, have been a mountaineer[1] for some time now. You've studied the fundamentals, selected your gear and experimented with methodology. In short, you are nobody's fool. Nonetheless, you also know a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. So you want to learn more. Smart thinking.

First, you must realize that once the basics of mountaineering are mastered, it is only nuance which distinguishes the true artists from the merely adequate. Therefore, attention to detail, especially in matters of clothing, is vital.

Always protect the head according to seasonal fluctuations. In winter, a warm hat is mandatory. (The head, after all, is the chimney of the body. Avoid cerebral heat loss – it diminishes your psychophysio abilities.) In summertime, a sun visor or a billed cap will guarantee crucial visibility among the craggy peaks.

Pay particular regard to your footgear. Shoes should be sturdy and stable. A secure footing is of utmost importance. Without it, you're asking for trouble. Point of order: while mountaineering is pursued for fun, it is nevertheless serious business. If you are going to down the mountains, rather than vice versa, you must be confident of your standing.

Between the head and the feet lies the area known to pros as "the body." Mountaineering bodywear is usually based on personal preference. However, keep a keen eye out for one common criterion. Your clothes should be comfortable and flexible, allowing for open movement, specifically in the vicinity of the arms. A free and responsive arm is a mountaineer's best friend.

Certain accessories, of course, complement and complete the regulation garb. Expedition flags to mark your territory in public places, connecting ropes for those who prefer the security of mountaineering in tandem and backpacks filled with beer nuts, mugs, bottle openers and other paraphanalia. Beyond these standards, wardrobe styles range from the rustic to the refined. And well they might, for mountaineers are a rugged and individual lot, joined only by a common taste for excellence.

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2, 3 and 4)

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — A 25-year-old CETA worker was released on his own recognizance yesterday after he allegedly smashed up the Springfield City Treasurer's office because his paycheck was delayed.

"Next time they'll know to have my check ready," predicted Carl Robinson as he walked out of the office Monday after smashing three large teller's windows and kicking in a display case.

Judge Clement Ferris continued charges of malicious damage and assault with a dangerous weapon until May 31st and ordered a plea of innocent entered for the defendant.

Robinson is employed by the city and paid with federal funds from the Comprehensive Education & Training Act.

City Treasurer, Edward G. Collins said Robinson "started cursing and swearing and smashing glass with a chair" after he was told it would take a week to issue him new paycheck.

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — A Springfield patrolman who claimed he was passed over for appointment to the rank of sergeant seven years ago because he was black finally has won his promotion.

William J. Self was named sergeant Monday after fighting the issue through the courts since 1971.

The Springfield Police Commission bowed to rulings by the state Supreme Judicial Court and several other judicial bodies and promoted Self.

"None of the present members of this commission were on the commission in 1971," said Chairman Gerald T. Teehan, insisting the long legal struggle was not a personal issue between the commissioners and Self.

"We think he understands this," Teehan said.

Self apparently is eligible for back pay of some $18,000 plus interest on that money and eight years seniority as a sergeant.

A Three party struggle

It is time to realize that there are three parties to what is shaping up to be a precedent setting power struggle on this campus. Those three parties are faculty, administration, and students. Once we accept the role as one side of a three way struggle, many things should naturally follow on our part.

First, we have got to realize that our present form of government is so weak as to be almost ignorable in a situation of three part negotiations. A few suggestions. Academic councils are needed. It is necessary to have Area Governments to represent the student interest when it comes to residential life. But when you come to the bottom line, we have more common interest with the people in our majors. Common interest like the quality of our departments, the curriculum, and career training. Student government will improve in scope and effectiveness if councils from academic departments are included to address these concerns.

Second, the present student government structure, based on a system of personal advancement, not necessarily on the basis of merit, has got to go. Clearly those in power are not those most capable of representing the students of this campus when things get to the hard bargaining stage. That stage is imminent. Student Government reform is not.

Third, the student government must move in the direction of becoming a legal entity. Right now our student budget is approved by the Trustees. If they don't like something in the budget they don't have to pass it. This severely restricts our ability to determine our actions. Also, we must become a legally recognized entity if we are to be able to bargain with two legally recognized groups. Becoming a legally recognized group could be as easy as calling ourselves a union and paying a certain amount of money each year to remain members. There are other ways of going about it, and the SGA should be exploring them all while considering that time is of the essence.

A problem that must be addressed personally by every student on this campus is the problem of apathy. It isn't fair or realistic to expect student leaders to represent our interest if we don't show a willingness to participate in the governmental process. It will certainly undermine our position if our representatives can be accused of not representing only the small group of people that voted to elect them.

Our education is important enough to warrant our commitment and the commitment of our representatives. Next fall will be the start of hard bargaining between faculty and administration. Let's hope that next fall will also be the start of adequate student representation and participation in this process.

Corrections on Asimov story

To the Editor:

Concerning the article in the Collegian about Dr. Isimov's lecture, I have several comments. In the May 3 issue you spelt his name 'Asinov' and in the May 4 issue you spelt it 'Asimov' in the caption under his photo. Come on, people, if you've got to have typo's try to make them in the middle of an article, not in a header or a caption!

About accuracy I also have a couple of gripes. From the ninth paragraph: "He said when we expand beyond our planetary system, the people of the world will outgrow their infancy and become mature ... " That statement is incorrect and mine is not just a different interpretation, in the question and answer period after the lecture someone asked about this subject, Asimov clarified by stating that if we don't mature we will destroy ourselves before ever reaching a sophisticated level of space colonization. Your statement seems to imply that colonization and maturity are cause and effect, respectively.

The article was laced with such interpretations as mentioned in the above paragraph. These interpretations should be labeled as such and not begin with 'Asimov said', followed by a clumsy paraphrase! Extensive paraphrasing in reportage does not help achieve accuracy, but can only harm it because it adds one more link to a relay chain that is already too long.

Issue is fame, not race

To the Editor:

I have several comments and questions in response to K. Stephen Shain's article entitled, "Spring Concert in Review."

First of all, does one go to a concert out of respect of the performers, as Mr. Shain said, or does one go to be entertained? Mr. Shain definitely went overboard in referring to the talent as legendary. Elvis was a legend, Louis Armstrong was a legend, and the Duke himself was a legend, but Buddy Guy, McCoy Tyner, and Pharoah Saunders? C'mon now, let's not get carried away.

True, the poor turnout was a result of ignorance, but it is the same ignorance that plagues all university cultural events. However, whether intended or not, the "proud and proclamatory ignorance" Mr. Shain refers to has racial overtones. Most people didn't go to the BAMF because the talent didn't appear to them, and they found other ways to spend their Saturday afternoon, not because they are racists.

Mr. Shain, do you think that a line-up of Ronnie Sessions, Zoot Sims, and Seatrain would pack the stadium? I would guess not, yet they are quite talented, and white. They have one thing going against them, they are virtually unknown.

Mr. Shain, before you totally condemn the UMass community, keep this in mind. To begin with, those who closely follow jazz are in a minority. Therefore, a small turnout should have been expected from the start. Although the performers are well known in jazz circles, you can't expect people to flock to the stadium to listen to people they've never heard of. Had the line-up been say B.B. King, Ella Fitzgerald, Dizzy Gillespie, or a Herbie Hancock, the place would have been packed. Mr. Shain, the issue here is not race, but fame.

Below the surface

To the Editor:

For the past week, I have attempted to do business with the Sporting Goods Co-op. This has been impossible due to the occupation of the Collegian area by women seeking access to Women's Pages. Each day I have informed the occupants, firmly but politely, using no profanity or insults, that I sympathize with their cause, but that I feel that it's not their right to interfere with the business of innocent bystanders; namely, myself and the Sporting-Goods Co-op. Each day my complaint has been answered with feelings of understanding and regret. I've appreciated this.

Today, however [May 8], I called once again to find out the status of the Sports Co-op. The "woman" who answered the phone told me that the Sporting Goods Co-op has moved to another location, but that she didn't know where. I began to tell her, calmly once again, that since the women's group had displaced the Sports Co-op, that they should find out where it went and be able to dispense that information over the phone. I was interrupted by this person who said "you don't have to be such a bitch about it." Although upset by this rude insult, I calmly went on to tell her that I, too, had a right to be heard. I told her that I felt that her group was alienating sympathizers by interfering with innocent organizations. She, by the way, refused to give me her name.

My point is this: Had I been a man, would this "woman" have called me a 'bitch'? I doubt it. Ironic, isn't it? As you can see, I can't in good faith, call this female person a "woman" — I cannot award her that sort of respect. People like herself arguing for the rights of women should look beyond their own noses at the wider scope of women's rights. I, as a woman and a human being, have the right to state my opinion. I don't have the right to insult or curse someone else; neither do I deserve to be insulted. I also don't deserve to be called a bitch by anyone for the crime of stating my opinion, and certainly not by someone who is fighting for the rights of women!

SGA: "thanks alot"

To the Editor:

Since this may be my last spring at the University of Massachusetts, I just want to thank the SGA for putting on the Spring Concert. Because this music was of a type I don't enjoy listening to, I decided not to go. Ninety per cent of the student population may have felt similarly.

Now, since the Government is supposed to reflect the interests of its people, something seems amiss. Perhaps the Collegian would print the names of the representatives who voted to restrict the Spring Concert to be of one type of music. Then, if ever I see any of those responsible running in a public election, I would know how they could be trusted to represent me.

African Liberation Day

The movement to support the liberation of southern Africa is growing in this country. Protests have hit dozens of college campuses and cities. The end of May marks a time of international solidarity — African Liberation Day, Philadelphia, 1978.

In 1971, the Organization of African Unity designated the end of May for a day of international support. In May, 1972, tens of thousands of people marched through the streets of cities across the U.S. for African Liberation Day. Black Americans and other oppressed people from all walks of life expressed militant solidarity with the liberation struggles in Africa and the determination to end national oppression in the United States. Similar demonstrations were held in Canada and the Caribbean.

Since 1972 and subsequent African Liberation Day rally, the liberation struggle has had successes. The Portuguese (supported by NATO and the U.S.) were thrown out of Guinea-Bisseau, Mozambique and Angola within the last few years.

In Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), Namibia (Southwest Africa) and Azania (South Africa), the freedom fighters have reached a critical stage. The white minority regime in Rhodesia, with the helping hand of the U.S. and Britain, have come up with an "Internal settlement", a "settlement" that changes a white face for a black one but does not change the "internal" conditions of oppression. In South Africa rebellions have rocked the apartheid regime. The other day though, South Africa felt strong enough to raid SWAPO (Southwest African People's Organization) in Angola, killing 600 people.

The U.S. imperialists are supporting the minority regimes in their efforts to bypass the liberation forces, in an attempt to maintain their hold on their profitable ventures with a puppet government. Meanwhile the U.S.S.R. poses as a friend of the liberation forces with its own imperialist plans for Africa. The rising struggle in Africa, coupled with these political maneuverings, put the struggle in Southern Africa at critical point that demands our support. African Liberation Day is a way of internationally declaring our support.

This year African Liberation Day is also a celebration of the development of the liberation support movement. Internationally South Africa grows increasingly isolated. Besides the UN sanctions, the presence of any of their representatives provokes demonstrations in many countries. Just recently the South African tennis team has been dropped from the Davis Cup competition (due in no small part to angry protests at their last appearance in Nashville).

Very broad student support has developed on numerous campuses. Demonstrations demanding universities out of their partnership with apartheid and U.S. involvement, through corporate stock investments have taken place at Harvard, Princeton, MIT, U of California, U of Oregon, U Wisconsin, U of Chicago, Miami University, Cornell, Weslyan, Wellsley, Boston College, Brown, Vassar, Williams, Yale, U of Massachusetts, Smith, Amherst College, Columbia, Rutgers, Dartmouth, Tufts and Brandeis. This has taken the form of petitioning vigils, rallies, demonstrations and building takeovers. This movement has spread like wildfire and forced UMass-Amherst, Hampshire, Smith and the University of Wisconsin at Madison into partial or total divestment of stocks of corporations in South Africa!

The rising struggle in Africa put the struggle in South Africa at a critical point that demands our support. African Liberation Day is a way of internationally declaring our support.

African Liberation Day (ALD) will be a day to bring it all together in militant solidariity with the freedom fighters of southern Africa. Demonstrations will be held in numerous cities. An important one has been called in Philadelphia for which the Revolutionary Student Brigade is organizing.

The "May 20 Coalition" called the demonstration and includes the "Citizens Committee to Insure Justice for MOVE", Philadelphia Citizens for Action, Project for Black Needs, the Revolutionary Student Brigade, OC African Liberation Support Committee, and the Revolutionary Workers Headquarters and endorsed by the Black Vendors Association, Moorish Americans, the Hebrew Israelites, and Walt Palmer-head of the City Wide Black Coalition for Human Rights.

This year we are marching on Philadelphia on African Liberation Day because nowhere is the struggle against national oppression in this country sharper, and nowhere is the real nature of this system that causes national oppression clearer than Rizzo's blockade of the MOVE organization in West Philly. Mayor Rizzo has launched an all out campaign against MOVE, a largely Black radical commune. Until a few days ago Rizzo had the MOVE house and an entire 6 block area blockaded. A little bantustan complete with passbooks to get in and out was set up in that community. MOVE has just begun giving up one by one.

Even though MOVE has given up, Rizzo moved 1000 police and the terror in the community continues unabated. Rizzo and the powers that be are using the MOVE incident to launch his national political campaign for a "white power movement". The KKK offered Rizzo the Racist of the Year Award for his accomplishments but he declined.

The method employed in Philly against MOVE because they have stood up to police attacks, school cutbacks and housing problems, is an attempt to establish a precedent. A few days ago a massive police force threatened to move in to blockade a predominately Black housing project in Chester, Pa. that is on rent strike in the same manner that the MOVE house and surrounding community were blockaded in Philly.

This kind of terrorism against Black people must be opposed. A slogan for the rally is "Hey Rizzo, have you heard, Philly ain't Johannesburg!"

African Liberation Day May 20 is the time to take a stand against "Imperialism and National Oppression from the Union of South Africa to the United States of America." It is a day when we let the whole world know that we stand with the liberation struggles in southern Africa and to indict the corporate rulers of this country who for centuries have reaped untold billions from the slave trade, apartheid slavery in South Africa, and centuries of brutal super-exploitation of blacks and other minorities in this country.

Optimum Insanity

Last Monday I saw another one of those newspaper ads which has men and various other students on campus so incensed. This particular piece, a full-page work published in the Collegian, was put out by the Annheuser-Busch beer company, but the basic message and mentality of the ad were characteristic of much of the advertising issued by most of today's companies.

This particular ad had a little bit of everything for everybody in it. Entitled, "The Optimum Moment," it enticed students to "drink it up" for every imaginable occasion. Calvin Coolidge's birthday, exams passed, the "Big Game," a time out with "your companion in hand" all supposedly represent suitable opportunities (excuses) to partake in a Busch beer. The ad is typical of many other contemporary ads in terms of its mindless, irrational appeal; in so many of today's advertisements, people are treated as greedy consumers who must buy more, more, more in order to lead a happy life.

Advertising is simply a means corporations employ to control consumer behavior. Through massive campaigns, people are warned that they will be unattractive if they do not use certain soaps, lotions, deodorants, and hair sprays; housewives are branded as failures unless they use the latest laundry detergents, floor waxes, and disinfectants; children are manipulated to believe that popularity and happiness come from having the newest toys.

The "free enterprise" system is based on consumers expressing preferences for goods through their purchasing decisions. Advertising reverses the sequence by shaping consumer preferences. Advertising plays on people's fears, hopes, and desires in order to sell the products poured out by corporate production. The pharmaceutical industry, to illustrate the point, spends $1 billion yearly — one quarter of its total revenue — on advertising campaigns that exploit American's unhappiness, anxiety, and illness and overdose them with drugs. In addition to creating a demand for specific products, advertising helps sustain the notion that corporate capitalism is desirable and that it is normal for a society to allocate its resources as they are allocated in the United States. Thus, advertising serves a political purpose that goes far beyond sales promotion.

Corporate advertising can be quite explicitly political, as when Johnny Cash tells TV viewers how Exxon is cleaning up America, G.E. pours forth progress, and Ma Bell brings joy into the wretched lives of separated Americans. More generally, the constant barrage of advertising can be considered political propoganda that infects American culture with materialism, competitiveness, a manipulative attitude toward one's own body and towards others, and an acceptance of corporate capitalism.

In his monumental best-seller The Greening of America, Charles Reich points out that the most powerful, the loudest, and the most persistent command in our society is the command to buy, to consume, to make material progress, to "grow". The voice of advertising urges us to buy, buy, buy — and it never lets up. And the voice of advertising is only the most obvious of the forces that include the mass media's portrayal of a "way of life" in their programs and stories, the rhetoric of businessmen and politicians praising economic "progress" and "growth", and the overwhelming influence of American high schools and colleges in portraying a materialistic way of life as a desirable form of existence, individually and nationally.

What are these voices saying? As we seem to hear them, they say "buy", "consume", "enjoy", "grow", "advance". But this is only half their message. The other half — just as real as if it were spread in full-page newspaper ads, or spoken imperatively by firm, confident television announcers — is this: "Don't spend money on city schools, on hospitals, on libraries, on the poor." "Ignore the pressing needs of society." "Don't think about what's inadequate or impoverished in our communal life." "Forget the Indians, forget the poor, forget the most elementary demands of decency and justice." If we actually heard and saw such ads, we would be incredibly outraged; yet we do hear them and see them, and we heed them.

Advertising describes a world that does not exist. Automobile ads portray cars in the tranquil setting of country lanes and green fields. One would never know that automobiles cause traffic jams, fatal accidents, and pollution. Airplane rides are relaxed, smooth, and efficient, with fine meals and attractive, friendly waitresses stewardesses. Not shown is the difficulty of reaching the airport, the long waits for planes that are often late, the overbooking that systematically occurs — and the large proportion of the population that cannot afford to utilize the "wings of man." Furthermore, advertising oversimplifies and stereotypes the world. A woman's chief cares are dirty dishes, floors, and shirt collars; preparing meals for her children and husband; and looking like a model. Blacks are smiling, cheerful, and middle class — just like white Americans. Students are beer drinkers, when they are not cooped up in libraries or screaming their lungs out at football games.

Well, with regards to the latter, students are not mindless sponges whose only function is to sop up rivers of Busch beer or to simply absorb the reams of so-called "knowledge" thrown at us daily or to take in every athletic contest on campus. Perhaps someone ought to relate this to the folks at Busch, Schlitz, et al. But, what's the solution? A boycott of Busch beer? Well, we'd have to boycott not only Busch products, but a lot of others as well because the type of degradation of human beings that we have been discussing permeates so much of the advertising we see.

Under capitalism, it is necessary for all of the output produced to be sold. Corporations are forced to resort to a feverish sales effort in order to insure an adequate demand for their manufactured goods. If, in that process of convincing consumers that they are not happier with having less, people are mistreated via absurd and irrational advertising, well, "them's the breaks." Perhaps we should first examine the "logic" of the economic system under which we live. If we see this system as one which insanely demands constant growth in order to survive and to continue providing a small minority of Americans with huge profits, if we realize that resources are misallocated and squandered on products imposed on us or not even related to need, then we may begin to resolve the problem of what to do about the advertising that assails and insults us all. For we will then realize that it is the system that is the problem and we will begin to dismantle it. THAT will be an "optimum moment".

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger urges Congress Monday to approve the administration's "package" sale of advanced aircraft to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, but seek an increase in fighters destined for Israel.

Arms sale package remains unchanged

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration insisted yesterday the basic terms of its sale of jet fighters to Egypt, Israel and Saudi Arabia will not be changed, but there was growing talk of a compromise that would later send additional war planes to Israel.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance told the House International Relations Committee that private negotiations are continuing with House and Senate members and that "some members on both sides" have suggested such a compromise.

Vance had met earlier in the day with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., left the session saying, "I believe we're on a road which could lead to a settlement."

The senators said they had agreed not to discuss details of the talks but Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., asked whether more fighters for Israel figured in the compromise talks, replied. "If that isn't one of the elements, I don't know what we're talking about."

President Carter wants to sell $4.8 billion worth of jet fighters. The deal calls for the sale of 15 F-15s and 75 F-16s to Israel, 60 F-15s to Saudi Arabia and 50 less sophisticated F-5Es to Egypt.

Vance told the House panel that negotiations are under way "to see if there is something that could be done that would be helpful" to provide assurances that aircraft sold to Arab states will not be used against Israel.

"We're having discussions with members on both sides of the hill and those discussions are continuing," Vance said. "That's the state of play."

When Vance was asked whether such assurance might include selling Israel 20 additional F-15 jet fighters at a later date, he replied, "some members on both sides have suggested that. That's all I can say."

Vance repeated several times that as far as the administration is concerned, the main components of the sale package "stand on their own two feet" and will not be changed. "The proposals are as they are," he said.

School funding suit filed

BOSTON [AP] — While the legislature wrestles with a proposal to increase school aid, a group of parents and school committee members has filed a class action suit challenging the constitutionality of the way in which public schools are financed in Massachusetts.

The suit, filed by 10 parents of public school students, claims that students in communities with lower property valuations are denied equal access to educational advantages.

The case is similar to suits filed in California, New Jersey, Connecticut and Ohio, which resulted in court decisions striking down property-tax based school financing.

"When one community can spend almost double what another spends to educate their children, the system of school finance is clearly unfair ... and in our view illegal," said Hatfield Selectman A. Cory Bardwell, president of the Massachusetts Selectman's Association.

The suit was announced at a joint press conference today held by the Selectman's Association and the Massachusetts League of Cities and Towns.

The suit comes at a time when the legislature is considering both a proposal to redistribute state school aid to cities and towns and a proposal by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to increase that aid by $150 million.

Figures compiled in connection with the suit show Brookline with an equalized valuation of $100,112 spends $2,835 on each student and Lincoln with a valuation of $109,773 spends $2,906, while Lynn, valuation $32,796, spends $1,493 and Douglas spends $1,284 and has an equalized valuation of $40,730.

The suit is brought by parents and school committee members from Lynn, Taunton, Leicester, Southwick, Douglas, Millbury, Winchendon, Hanson, Pembroke and Brockton.

'Madonna Mia'—Rome weeps for Moro

ROME [AP] — "Madonna Mia," wept a housewife when she learned of Aldo Moro's death at the hands of terrorist kidnappers. "They are assassins, assassins. They should all be shot to death."

Sirens screamed, sobbing crowds gathered on street corners and others sought solace in nearby churches yesterday when word spread throughout Italy that Moro's bullet-ridden body, his feet chained, had been found on the floor of a stolen Renault parked in the heart of Rome.

"Bastards! bastards!" a woman cried. "He suffered so much."

Pope Paul VI went to pray in his private chapel. Italy's major labor unions called an eight-hour work stoppage yesterday. In Milan, workers planned a massive rally in Cathedral Square.

Premier Giulio Andreotti called an emergency Cabinet session and President Giovanni Leone scheduled an address to the nation. Leaders of the Italian Communist Party met in the afternoon.

"This is a crime of sadist ferocity," declared Giancarlo Pajetta, a top Communist official as he entered the meeting.

Italian and party flags were immediately lowered to half staff at Christian Democrat headquarters.

The groundswell of feeling surrounding Moro's tragic death recalled the American reaction to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. As president of the ruling Christian Democrat Party and five-time premier, Moro was one of Italy's best known public figures.

"We need to bring back the death sentence," said one emotionally wrought man. Capital punishment was abolished after World War II.

Silent and sullen crowds milled around the narrow cobblestoned Via Michelangelo Caetani where the red car bearing Rome license plates N57686 was abandoned between Community Party headquarters and Christian Democrat headquarters with Moro's body slumped in back.

"Maybe it's not him," said one onlooker, remembering the previous hoaxes surrounding the Red Brigades' threat to carry out a death sentence against Moro after a "people's trial."

"I can't believe they have killed him."

But the blue-jacketed, machine gun-toting Carabinieri, Italy's national policemen, had the answer on their silent, stonelike faces. Agents blocked off the area and held back journalists and mourners.

Rhodesian guerrillas strike

JULIASDALE, Rhodesia [AP] — Two black guerrillas burst into the dining room of a luxurious mountain hotel and sprayed guests with automatic rifle fire, killing two white Rhodesian women and wounding three others, including an American.

One guest at the Montclair Hotel was slain in the Monday night attack while she was eating supper. The second victim, a hotel employee, was killed near the door, officials say.

The wounded American was identified as Minnie Bolin, 77, of Apache Junction, Ariz. She suffered superficial head injuries caused by flying glass when a grenade exploded outside the hotel's terrace windows, and was reported in good condition at a hospital in Umtali.

Tourist resorts have become prime targets for guerrillas waging their 5½-year-old war against the government of Prime Minister Ian Smith. The hotel appeared to be unguarded, although most tourist areas have strict security.

Guerrillas fired at least three rocket-propelled grenades at the hotel, located 80 miles east of Salisbury and 20 miles from Mozambique, a base for guerrilla offensives.

Witnesses said diners dived under tables as the gunmen raked the dining room with bursts from Communist-made AK-47 automatic rifles.

Rice's bat starts trend

BOSTON [AP] — Ted Williams' slugging started the trend and now Jim Rice's power hitting for the Boston Red Sox is forcing opposing managers to put fielders in odd places.

The Jim Rice shift — four outfielders, three infielders — was created Monday night by Kansas City Royals Manager Whitey Herzog, who sought to cool off the American League's top slugger.

Rice had doubled in his first at bat in the game won by Boston 8-4. When he came to bat in the third inning, the big outfielder was temporarily baffled.

Royals third baseman Jerry Terrell moved to left field and left fielder Tom Poquette to left center. Second baseman Frank White vacated his position to play third base.

"I turned to the umpire Mike Reilly and asked if they had too many men on the field," said Rice. "He said, 'No, they just have four outfielders'. I figured I better get up there and swing."

He rammed the first pitch from Dennis Leonard to deep center field where Amos Otis hauled it in.

Later, Rice lifted a towering pop that fell for an infield hit when White and shortstop Fred Patek got their signals crossed in the makeshift infield alignment.

Herzog's maneuver recalled the move by Cleveland Indians Manager Lou Boudreau against Williams, 22 years ago in the second game of a doubleheader.

Williams had hit three home runs in the first game and Boudreau installed three infielders on the right side as a challenge to the future Hall of Famer's pull hitting.

Herzog said he's tried the Rice version before, in 1973 as Texas Ranger Manager against Minnesota Twins slugger Harmon Killebrew.

"I've been looking at the box scores," said Herzog. "I've been watching the way he's hitting the ball. After that double, I said, 'It's time'."

"I tried to hit the ball like any other time," said Rice, who leads the major leagues in RBI's with 32. "I guess they were trying to psyche me out."

"It's a tribute to the power of Jimmy Rice," said Boston Manager Don Zimmer. "It made common sense. It was a sound move. But when Rice hits it, no one will catch it."

In the seventh inning Monday night, Herzog took no chances, ordering an intentional walk for Rice with two outs and Boston leading 5-4. Boston veteran Carl Yastrzemski then hit the second pitch from ace reliever Al Hrabosky for a three-run home run that clinched the Red Sox victory.

Rice sparks Sox victory

The Boston Red Sox defeated the Kansas City Royals 4-3 last night for their seventh straight win behind a seventh inning two run blast by who else, Jim Rice. The home run was Rice's tenth of the year and his thirty-third and thirty-fourth RBIs of the still young season.

Dennis Eckersley upped his record to 2-1 in pitching the complete game, striking out 8 in the process, while scattering 7 hits.

The Sox were ahead until the seventh inning when Amos Otis smashed a two-run homer to even the score. In the bottom half of the inning, Jerry Remy led off with a triple and Jim Rice stepped up to the plate. With the count two balls and one strike, Rice sent an inside pitch over everything in left to put the Sox up for good.

The win upped the 2nd place Sox' record to 19-10, and keeps them within 2½ games of the league leading Tigers. The "World Champion" Yankees are in third place.

Six Foreign clubs eye America's Cup

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — The New York Yacht Club announced yesterday that six foreign yacht clubs, including one representing England's return to competition, have challenged for the America's Cup in 1980.

The club's America's Cup Committee, which met Monday in New York, released the list of challengers for the 1980 races in a statement drafted by a New York City public relations firm.

Challenges accepted by the committee came from:

— Yacht Club d'Hyeres of France.
— Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron of Australia.
— Royal Perth Yacht Squadron of Western Australia.
— Royal Yacht Club of Gothenburg, Sweden.
— Royal Southern Yacht Club of England.
— And Societe des Regats Rochellaises of France.

Commodore Henry H. Anderson Jr. of the New York Yacht Club said the list of foreign challengers is the largest in the cup's 127-year history, breaking the 1977 record of four challengers.

"We've obviously got a lot to learn about who some of these people are," Anderson said. "But we're pleased. This will be the most challengers ever."

Last summer, Baron Marcel Bich brought two yachts over from Yacht Club D'Hyeres and the Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron again sent veteran campaigner Gretel II to Newport.

The Royal Gothenburg Yacht Club of Sweden will be returning for a second time with Sverige, a computer-designed 12-meter that lost in the foreign finals to Australia in 1977.

Royal Perth made its first challenge in 1974 with Southern Cross. Alan Bond backed the Southern Cross effort but abandoned Royal Perth for the Sun City Yacht Club and the yacht Australia last year.

The Royal Southern Yacht Club, which is making its first challenge, will represent the return of Britain's effort to capture the America's Cup. The last time England was represented was in 1964.

The Societe des Regats Rochellaises, which bought 1958 defender Columbia from the Sverige syndicate last year, is entirely new to America's Cup competition but will challenge in 1980.

The UMass boat looked haggard, having rowed fairly hard in their qualifying heat. They only beat two of the other boats off the line. They gradually worked their way up to the front of the pack. However they couldn't move on the leader UNH and had to fight off an early sprint by Wesleyan to finish second in 6:26.3, losing to UNH by six seconds. UMass was followed by Wesleyan (6:26.7), WPI (6:28.4), URI (6:39.9) and Holy Cross (6:43.3).

A senior's plea to keep hockey at UMass

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

A quick glance at Russ Smith's column yesterday ("Shooting the bull") sent me into convulsions in the Worcester Dining Commons. Now I don't know if it was the food (which it might have been) or the statement that hockey might fade out of the University's athletic program, but both statements sent me into a frenzy.

Why is hockey ignored or treated as a second rate sport in Western Massachusetts? I'll never understand. Maybe I was brought up on Bobby Bauer Black Panthers too early, and didn't get the chance to appreciate a bright orange Rawlings basketball. But DAMN! The thought scares me.

The University of Massachusetts is sitting in the most fertile stream of hockey talent and yet, it chooses to promote football and basketball 100% compared to the 0% support of the hockey team. Why? This year's hockey team defeated the defending Division II champs Marrimack, overwhelmed the always tough Cadets of Army, edged the improving Crusaders of Holy Cross and utterly humiliated the Chargers of New Haven, and all of this without hockey scholarships!

How can one expect Jack Canniff to do a better job? In fact, I wonder "how" he's able to take the crap that's dished out from the athletic department. I can recall taking four hour bus rides to West Point, New York, whereupon we (me and the UMass players) were whisked into a shabby arena to play hockey and, upon completion, were whisked out with cold bologna sandwiches to return in the cold night air to UMass (arrived at 4 a.m. and expected to go to class that day). Does anybody in their right mind think that the basketball team or football team would be forced into 8-hour bus trips and no hotel accommodations?

This is by no means an attack upon the integrity of the football and basketball players, who deserve what they're getting, but it's a plea to please recognize hockey as an integral part of any big school's athletic program. There are hundreds of people on the UMass campus who are involved in hockey classes and intramural hockey, as well as the varsity hockey program, but the athletic department keeps on ignoring hockey as if it were "second rate". They've cut out the junior varsity program, which is tantamount to wiping out the farm systems of major league baseball teams, and they probably would have phased out the varsity programs if it hadn't come up with some stunning victories in the 1977-78 season.

The big question at UMass is this: How much longer will hockey be a part of the athletic program? The answer is simple. With the hockey team sharing an arena with Amherst College it's hard to draw top rate players at UMass, which is also compounded by the problem of no scholarships, and consequently unless Jack Canniff can continue to produce fairly competent teams, the hockey program will be a thing of the past.

The culmination of my disgust with hockey — prejudice in western Massachusetts came the other night when I was forced to listen to the Bruins semifinal match with the Flyers on the radio because the television networks in this area didn't think it was worthy enough for their regular programming.

The purpose of this article? As a senior, who covered hockey, who loves hockey, and would hate like hell to see the death of hockey at UMass, I'm begging the athletic department to divert money from somewhere to keep this much needed program alive.

Gorillas' season Finale

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

It's the season finale: UMass at Dartmouth, today at 3 p.m.

The last collegiate game for seniors (co-captains) Pit Martin and Rich Donovan — as it is for Mike Gongas, Mike Lettera, Lennie Caffrey, Fran Yung and Pete McCarty.

Coming off of the Springfield game, where Coach Garber got to do a lot of shifting around of players as it was obvious the Chiefs for the most part, were out of the game, the team ironically will end its season the same way it began — on a bus trip. However the way the team has played the last few games, the outcome should be different than that opening day defeat to Cornell a little over six weeks ago.

Currently the statistics on the two teams show this: UMass is Number One in New England (Harvard No. 2) and rated 12th in the Nation. It is conceivable that should fifth rated (in New England) Dartmouth upset UMass, the Gorillas could drop in the NE ratings.

While the Gorillas would understandably like to finish up the year on a positive note, Dartmouth meanwhile will be attempting to even its record at 5-5 (naturally, they currently are 4-5 then).

Last season UMass defeated Dartmouth by a 14-9 score here in Amherst. But with this being the last hurrah of the '78 campaign, the Minutemen should come out flying high. Hopefully this will lead to a big UMass lead, which will allow the players a chance to swap positions again. The players seemed to have a good time in their new spots against Springfield — the Chiefs still had a hard time against UMass.

Crossbar ... According to the Boston Globe, Sweet had seven goals vs. Springfield — if so, I stand corrected (anybody can make a mistake: ... Donovan also had a goal playing attack instead of his usual defensive spot ... according to a Chief fan, his team consists of only a handful of players who played lacrosse before attending the Phys. Ed. school ... there were more players (if you added the two teams together) than fans — guess lacrosse hasn't caught on there yet ... or maybe it has to compete with the Basketball Hall of Fame, which is adjacent to their polyturf field ... the lacrosse team has ended up in the top fifteen in country the last five seasons (prior to this year), ... the team has already won the ILA Northeast Division Title (includes schools such as UConn, UNH, BC, etc.) ... season wrapup upcoming ...

...writin' ain't easy

What, as a non-journalism person, I never realized (and thusly took for granted) is the difference between (us) on the Collegian sports department vs. the non-writer, is the dangerously powerful touch of the sportswriter's freely flowing pen. While anyone and everyone is entitled to their own opinion on any given subject, sportswriters have the freedom of putting their opinions in ink for the public to view.

This is where I concede that the combination of a Bic pen, blank white paper attached to a clipboard, with a hot, waiting Smith-Corona typewriter 'on hold' in the Collegian office (wherever that may happen to be) expectant of some young hotshot reporter to come in with a scoop story, lends itself to more problems than is conceivable.

Don't get me wrong. Sportswriting is fun. It has its moments. While at the same time it can have its drawbacks. It can be time consuming (which cuts down on studying—and we can't have that, now can we?) and occasionally a pain in the neck. Somehow it comes up worth it (Must be the people. Either that or the great parties). Just covering a baseball beat can be tough on a reporter. The writer must try to think of how to make each game sound interesting (even if it was dull, remember) to the reader. No reporter wants to write each game story the same way.

What makes it even tougher is that baseball games are basically won the same way; couple hits here, couple hits there, good pitching, and the usual clutch defense. Not to forget the timely walking to the mound by the catcher and shortstop to discuss the picther's last moonball pitch which was whacked out of the ballpark for a grand slam home run putting the opposition up 4-0 in the first inning.

Now, what I have just written in the above paragraph is an example of what I'm actually trying to say by inking this commentary: People can get upset over the written word if it is an infringement of their own personal opinions. Look back at that last paragraph for a minute. To say that all baseball games are won through the same methods is ridiculous but by writing that same statement in earnest could lead to the story being misconstrued; and get people mad.

Occasionally writers touch upon a controversial issue (basketball team's personality conflicts; the national anthem, for examples) which places them (us) in an unenvialble position (subject to criticism, too). To pick on say, Jack Leaman as head coach of the basketball team, may not hit well with Mr. Leamen (or the team) but it may be (and may not be) the truth—and be agreeable with fans' point of view.

In the fall, the Collegian sports staff will be almost completely overhauled with a fresh set of bodies.

Crewmen hit low tide

By ANDY BLUME
Collegian Staff

It was just not the best weekend for the men's crew team, as the varsity eight came in second and the JV eight and varsity four finished last in the New England Open Regatta Saturday on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester.

The weatherman really blew it when calling for a cold, cloudy, and rainy day on Saturday. It was far from that. The sun came out in full force around noon, the wind was calm and the weather beautiful. M$ny of the spectators would walk away from the lake with sunburns.

The qualifying heats were all held in the morning. The freshman four was the first UMass boat to race. They won their heat in the time of 7:51.7, beating ULowell, Worcester State College, and Connecticut College in that order. Connecticut, finishing fourth, was eliminated from the finals as only the top three would qualify.

The next qualifying heat for UMass was the varsity eight. The varsity also won their heat in 6:24.9, beating URI and Holy Cross.

The final qualifying heat for UMass was the freshman eight. The undefeated freshman boat showed their strength as they breezed to an easy victory over Holy Cross, Amherst, and Wesleyan's lightweights in the time of 6:51.3.

The first of the afternoon finals was the freshman four. UMass would have their work cut out for them in the five-boat final as WPI, URI, and Assumption (eliminated from the finals) all had better times than UMass in their qualifying heat. The UMass boat got off to a slow start as they trailed the field after the first twenty strokes. They quickly passed WSC around the 500 meter mark and proceeded to work on ULowell. They fought them neck and neck for a good portion of the race and moved away from them at the 1500 meter point. They started to move on the leaders but began their sprint too late and had to settle for a third place finish behind the winner WPI (7:29.0) and second place URI (7:45.1) in the time of 7:58.0.

The next final for UMass was the JV eight. There was no qualifying heat in this event. Fate struck the UMass boat as the oar popped out of stroke Bob Hanson's oarlock after the first twenty strokes of the race. The oar fell into the water and seven man Pat Bronder suddenly found himself stroking the boat. The crew, which had had a half-length lead at that point, made a valiant attempt to stay in the race but finished behind Coast Guard, UNH, Wesleyan, Connecticut College, and Holy Cross in that order.

The freshman eight final was the next race. This was to be a classic battle between the undefeated UMass boat and the Coast Guard lightweights (UMass had beaten their heavyweights a week earlier). The Academy boat won going away, however, in the time of 6:37.3. UMass finished second in 6:46.4, followed by Holy Cross, Amherst, WPI, and Wesleyan.

The varsity four was next. The UMass boat consisted of three freshman and a varsity oarsman who rowed together for three days prior to the race. Their inexperience showed as they trailed the other seven boats all the way.

The last race was the varsity eight final.

'Plate, IC in IM Finals

Home Plate and the International Club advanced to the finals of the Intramural Softball championships yesterday, winning their respective semi-final contests.

International's Mike Fallon pitched a no hitter and contributed two hits to his own cause, as they defeated the Conquistadors, 7-0.

Dave Croasdale secured the no-hit effort with a couple of fine line drive stabs at third base, while John Romboli played an excellent defensive left field. Danny Clerico blasted a two-run homer to lead the attack.

Home Plate, in the meantime, extended their overall record to 9-0 with a 2-1 victory over the Fuckowes.

John "Tuba" Sheehan singled in the first, and scored the first run on some aggressive base running, scoring from second on an infield grounder by Glenn Gagliardi, just sliding under the catcher's tag.

A second inning double by Billy Weiss and a triple to right field by Corso Donati drove home what proved to be the Plate's winning run.

The two teams will battle it out in the campus final this afternoon on Boyden Field No. 2. Game time will be 5:45 p.m.

Bruins win

An empty net goal by Bobby Schmautz with thirty-four seconds remaining insured the Bruins a victory over the Philadelphia Flyers by the score of 4-2.

Planning ahead

Basketball in the springtime. Seems absurd doesn't it? In reality, now is as good a time as any to talk about basketball if the subject at hand is recruiting. College basketball coaches around the country are engaged in the thick of the recruiting season, trying to land just one young high school player upon which to build a team of the future.

The recruiting process itself begins long before the snow that melts in the spring has even appeared.

It all starts with a list of high school juniors and proceeds from there. The list, by the way, is compiled by coaches, scouts, alumni, etc.

The next step is to find out the summer plans of those listed, that is, where they are going to play during the summer so they can be watched and a judgement can be made upon their ability.

In September, a player that displayed talent during the summer and is academically sound (10-25 percent of all recruits are lost due to poor grades) is contacted along with his high school coach and parents in order to set up a visit to the college that is after him. During the visit, the big pitch to land the player is made. Visits are usually made during the player's senior high school year, therefore the college coach or his assistant has seen the player in action during the school year numerous times.

UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman has already landed two youngsters for next year. They are Mike Grammel, a six foot seven forward out of Hamilton, Ohio who has averaged fifteen points and nine rebounds during his high school career and Jeff Bierly, a six foot three inch guard from Middletown, Ohio who averages seventeen points a game and is a fine defensive player according to Coach Leaman.

Both are "deep shooters" meaning they have the ability to hit from the outside which is important when a team is playing against a zone defense.

One must realize that Grammel and Bierly are being recruited for the team members that are leaving after next year, not this year. Tom Witkos and Bill Morrison were recruited with the hopes of replacing the departing Pyatt, Eldridge, and Claiborne.

"In the course of three years we will have lost seven or eight top players (starting with Jim Town and Mark Donahue)," cites Leaman.

Coach Leaman has been given a lot of flack about not recruiting hard in the Boston area. Leaman states that this is not true. He says that one of the difficulties in getting people to come here is the bad image UMass has as a state school and the fact that such noteworthy schools as Holy Cross, BU, BC, URI, Providence, and Harvard are located in or close to the city itself, unlike UMass which is across the state and stuck in the sticks. In fact, Coach Leaman is very proud of the fact that he was able to compete with some of the nation's top college basketball schools like Rutgers and Oregon for the services of James Bailey and Felton Sealy, finishing second to these respective schools in the fight for the players mentioned, although he is disappointed that they are not attending UMass.

Net Notes ... Anyone who knows anything about Minuteman basketball knows that the best player to come out of UMass has been the immortal "Dr. J", Julius Erving. But what few know is that when Erving was recruited in high school he was a mere six feet three and one half inches! He narrowed his college choices down to BU, St. John's, and UMass and chose the latter because it was located on a campus rather than in a big city. Coach Leaman admits that "we were very fortunate to have Julius come here to play."

On the pro prospects of the departing seniors, Leaman had this to say concerning each.

Mike Pyatt: "Mike played well down the stretch; he shot extremely well. He has a chance if the team that drafts him needs a quick forward."

Alex Eldridge: "It's up to him to make up his mind if he wants to play pro or not. He has great potential. A great ball handler who can penetrate and set up scores."

Derick Claiborne: "He has a problem being only six foot two and the fact that he is a ball handler rather than a shooter hurts his chances. He is the steadiest guard I've ever coached and he could surprise a few people if he makes it to camp."

The undergraduate student senate last night passed a motion calling for the resignation of Student Government Association co-Presidents Bob Dion and Donald Bishop.

The senate discussed the budget for fiscal year 1978-79, but at press time the results of the discussion were unavailable.

Other senate business included the formation of a summer senate coordinating committee and John Hensleigh was approved by the senate as temporary attorney general. The progress of negotiations between the student senate collective bargaining task force and the Massachusetts Society of Professors was also discussed, (see related story this page) and the senate passed a motion made by Donald Bishop to hold a conference of student senators in August to discuss the reorganization of the Student Government Association. Another motion was passed which established senate support in many legislative and campus wide issues.

These issues included the development of student run co-ops, availability of check cashing for students, lobbying by the senate for refinancing of the Campus Center, and increased student representation on the University Board of Trustees and UMass Building Authority.

Tension ran high among senators and visitors over the scheduled budget discussions. The tense atmosphere reflected in the many quarrels which broke out between senators, and with senate speaker Brian DeLima.

The motion calling for the resignation of senate co-presidents Dion and Bishop passed by a 53-28 margin. The motion for resignation was made last week by senator James O'Connell. "The entire student body should choose the presidents of the Student Government Association," said O'Connell. "The electoral convention was not a moral way to elect a president."

The Student Government Association Constitution does not make the motion for resignation binding. It is now the decision of the co-presidents as to whether they will resign from office.

"We will think about resigning," said Dion, "but I do not feel we should resign until the job we set out to do is completed.

Next fall the composition of the members of the senate will have changed. We have a lot of support from the area governments," Dion said.

The motion to form a summer senate coordinating committee met with disapproval. Wheeler dormitory Senator Jay Flynn motioned to have the ex-officio members of the president's council deal with senate matters over the summer, instead of the coordinating committee. The motion was defeated 53-24. Flynn said his rationale for introducing the motion was because "I have no confidence in the coordinating committee. There would be a larger number of members in the president's committee than the 13 members in the coordinating committee."

The senate coordinating committee was formed to deal with any emergency senate matters over the summer. Other matters which are planned to be dealt with are collective bargaining, the dorm rent rebate policy, and the preparation for dorm lease. The coordinating committee is composed of senate officers, representatives of the Third World, and women's caucus, and the chairpersons of senate committees.

Suspension orders drawn for Collegian occupiers

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The UMass administration and the Student Judiciary are drawing up an order to suspend all students occupying the Collegian office.

"We cannot pecmit the violations of the code (student Code of Conduct) and the court order to continue," said Attorney General Jeffrey A. Lutsky yesterday after a meeting with Dean of Students William F. Field.

Field said he hadn't yet considered how the administration would determine the identities of the students to be suspended because he did not know exactly who was involved in the occupation.

He also said he did not know when the order would be complete. "We have not set times or timetables," he said.

The students are subject to suspension because they ignored a Student Judiciary restraining order which called for access to be permitted to the office.

The students were served the order because they were breaking student regulations about protests.

The order was served 10 days ago, on April 24, which was the morning after students supporting women's pages barricaded the Collegian office refusing access to any staff members.

The restraining order called for the women to allow immediate access to the office. It said the order should be enforced by UMass Director of Security Saul L. Chafin. The security force has made no moves towards permitting access.

The order was drawn up upon request of Collegian representatives.

Lutsky, Field, and Clerk of Courts Barry M. Benson met for the third time yesterday in the Whitmore administration building before deciding to draw up the suspension order.

"Anyone who is suspended would eventually have the opportunity of a hearing," Lutsky said. Hearings are usually called 10 to 12 days after the suspension is issued, or in this instance 10 to 12 days after the occupiers left the office.

According to Lutsky, he was been pushing the action for about a week, but until recently the administration has taken "a wait and see attitude."

"For the last week our hands were tied. We were in favor of moving from the start," he said. He also said they have tried to review all options before processing the suspension.

"Suspension is the most serious thing we can do," he said. "This could scar their academic records forever."

According to Lutsky and Benson, only the administration can enforce the order upon request of the Student Judiciary. The administration has been reluctant to move because "we were hopeful that negotiations would go some place," Lutsky said.

Benson said five days ago the Student Judiciary requested that the administration "move on with the subject," but it was up to Dean Field to decide when and how the order would be enforced, if at all.

"In this particular instance, our hands are tied," Benson said.

"The enforcement powers of the judiciary are in the administration," specifically Dean Field who called for all suspensions, Lutsky said.

Senate to meet with faculty union

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to continue meeting with the Massachusetts Society of Professors on possible joint student-faculty action in response to faculty-administration negotiations.

The Senate Collective Bargaining Task Force reported that progress had been made in student faculty negotiations which were mandated by the Senate last week. The task force is also scheduled to meet with administrators. The senate also voted last night to "neither endorse nor condem the grade withholding action presently planned by the MSP." The MSP is the Amherst unit of the faculty union.

Negotiations between the faculty and the administration broke down on April 24 when the administration walked out of bargaining sessions. Each side has accused the other of breaking off the talks. The faculty response included consideration of withholding grades. Students and faculty have been examining the possibility of joint action against the administration. A procedure has been worked out by the faculty which task force member Bill Bluestein claims will put the responsibility for withholding the grades on the administration. This includes faculty filing grades which will need further processing and a system where students can get their grades from faculty when they give postcards to their professors.

Bluestein, who made the presentation to the senate, said the most important aspects of negotiations concerned three areas: course and teacher evaluation release and utilization; Student representation in department committees; and full parity for students in negotiations. Bluestein said that the details of these areas still had to be worked out but that the faculty was supportive in some cases.

Former student government president Jay Martus moved that the senate "condem the faculty for (considering) taking action of withholding grades and picketing commencement." Martus said that the faculty had "excluded students from the academic affairs area."

Task Force member Greg Tarpinian said Martus's view was "alarmist" and "anti-union."

Amherst approves safety budget

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst town meeting last night approved the proposed $1.2 million public safety budget as recommended by the Finance Committee, but only approved the administration and finance budget after the original proposal was amended to include more cuts.

The annual Amherst town meeting is scheduled to reconvene tonight at 7:30 at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The approved public safety budget ($1,205,303) includes the budgets for the police department ($564,491), fire department ($461,132), emergency medical service ($146,508), civil defense ($400) and animal control ($9,310).

The original FinCom recommended budget was passed only after a motion to cut the proposed public safety budget to $1,190,503 was offered by Selectman Nathaniel Reed. That motion to cut the public safety budget was part of a series of proposed cuts read to the town meeting by Selectman Diana H. Romer.

The Board of Selectmen met last night prior to the town meeting to discuss where possible budget cuts could be made. Romer said this action stemmed from the strong opposition in town meeting to the proposed $14.5 million budget, which had called for an estimated increase of $1.50 per $1,000 valuation on the tax rate.

Romer opened the meeting by informing town meeting members the Board of Selectmen and the town Manager had met and decided where cuts totaling $121,281 could be made in the budget.

Romer said board members intended to continue to defend the original proposed budget, but they had heard "a desire for a lower budget and a desire for guidance in making the cuts."

The plan called for cuts coming in administration and finance, public safety, human services, planning and code enforcement, public works, Article 21 (calling for one police cruiser and a pick-up truck), Article 25 (dealing with drainage) and Article 41 (dealing with the Highway Safety Officer).

Meeting member William Gurski, as he has in the three previous sessions, moved the proposed administration and finance budget be cut from $768,035 to $737,937. Romer then made a motion stemming from the afternoon meeting between town officials, calling for a new proposed administration and finance budget of $755,869.

The first vote defeated the original FinCom recommended budget of $768,035 by a vote of 124-70.

Although town meeting members ignored these compromise budget cuts from Town Manager and selectmen in approving the original public safety budget, they heeded the town officials advice and approved the compromised administration and finance budget.

That left town meeting to vote on the Romer motion of an amended administration and finance budget of $755,869, which was approved by a tally vote of 125-81.

After approving the public safety budget, town meeting then began work on the human services budget, but had reached no decision by press time.

Group tries to stop mall

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

A Hadley group is trying today to halt construction of the $5 million Hampshire Mall, the second attempt to do so this month.

Atty. Thomas Lesser of Northampton will seek a temporary injunction in Suffolk Superior Court on behalf of the Citizens for the Preservation of Hadley. They are attempting to keep Pyramid Companies from continuing to build on land at Rte. 9 and South Maple Street.

The group claims Pyramid did not wait for a building permit granted by the town to mature a required 20 days before construction began.

On Monday, a Suffolk Superior Court judge denied another request for a temporary injunction, according to Atty. Joel Z. Eigerman of Boston. Eigerman also has filed a suit on behalf of Mountain Farms Mall trustee Charles Schnies against Pyramid.

No date has been set for a hearing on that suit, Eigerman said yesterday.

The citizens group met Tuesday night and discussed alternatives to discouraging construction of the mall, which began last month.

The group hopes to get special Town Meeting on May 18 to reject three warrant articles that would facilitate widening South Maple Street. They claim that preventing the widening would invalidate the building permit.

Also, 40 persons signed up for a work force that would circulate petitions asking shoppers to boycott the mall. Patricia Kicza, one of the group's organizers, said the petitions would then be sent to stores planning to move into the mall.

Cornell provost possible for UMass presidency

David Knapp, Provost at Cornell University, was interviewed yesterday by UMass by faculty, administration, and students as a candidate for the UMass presidency.

Knapp is the last of the five final candidates to be interviewed. The Board of Trustees will meet in Boston Monday, possibly to determine which candidate will be offered the presidency.

Knapp, who is a graduate of Harvard University, has also visited the UMass Boston and Worcester campuses for similar interviews by those campuses' faculty, administration, and students.

Annual Spring Barbecue set for next Tuesday

The University Food Services Twelfth annual All-Campus Barbecue will be held Tuesday from 4:30 - 7:00 p.m. at the Southwest Residential area playing fields.

The event, which has become a springtime tradition, is scheduled to feature live music by "Avatar", and barbequed chicken and other "delights". Beer on top is also scheduled to be available.

The event is open to all students with meal books. Those without meal books can purchase a ticket for $3.

Franklin Dining Commons will remain open to serve dinner to those who cannot attend the event.

Physical plant workers set Old Chapel clock

Physical Plant employees George Hall and Edward Kozera yesterday ascended to the top of the Old Chapel to correct the time of the chapel's clock, according to Physical Plant Electric Shop manager Clint Jarvis.

The clock was running about 45 minutes slow, after last week's switch to Daylight Saving Time from Eastern Standard Time.

"They manually advanced the clock," Jarvis said, "a minute at a time."

UMass health services offer summer coverage

University Health Services will again offer pre-paid health services to UMass students and their dependents who will remain in the Amherst area this summer.

This includes students and their dependents from the Five College area. The fee for the service will be $40, and $40 for dependents. The services will include: physician and nurse practitioner consultation, 24-hour urgent care on campus, dental and mental health services, diagnostic services, medications, eye examinations, in-patient care, and education and consultation services.

Students who are enrolled in the University Summer Session and pay a health fee as part of their service fees can pay an additional amount to obtain coverage for the entire summer period.

Communications center aids writing skills

University students who need help with reading and writing — even if its writing a doctoral dissertation — can get that help at the UMass Communications Center.

The center, headed by Director Shirley M. DeShields, is staffed by 28 workers, most of them undergraduate and graduate students.

The center provides undergraduate, graduate, and foreign students with development programs in study skills, note-taking, research writing, test taking, and other areas.

Most students in the program come "for a variety of reasons," DeShields said. "Some of the good ones come to expand their skills."

Toilet paper scarce after Southwest 'party'

Life is a carnival, believe it or not
Life is a carnival, two bits a shot
—J.R. Robertson

By the Collegian Southwest Bureau

Simply enough, it was a party for all those who cared to attend.

Amid streams of firey toilet paper, exploding fireworks, wooden bonfires, ecstatic yelling, and rock and roll pouring out of the towers, Southwest Tuesday night erupted into a spontaneous celebration totally in keeping with its reputation of the academic insane asylum of the east coast.

For three hours the frustration of a long and arduous semester and the anxiety over exams beginning to rear their ugly heads was all forgotten. In its place came a carnival atmosphere, producing a frenzy that could be heard from the Campus Center to both Central and Orchard Hills residential areas.

There was the student who decided the event would be incomplete unless he repelled from the sixth floor of the John Adams dorm to the ground, and so he did. There was the bonfire on the pyramids in front of Washington. There were the showers of water cascading down from the upper reaches of the towers, the flags waving out the windows and the streakers. Above all else, there were about 1000 people just blowing off steam.

All the students enjoyed the festive occasion except for one, who was arrested for being a disorderly person.

And what was the cause de celebre? "It was the Bruins," said Mike Cunningham, one of the streakers from Kennedy dormitory. He was referring to the Bruins victory over the dreaded Flyers of Broad Street that will allow them to return to the friendly confines of Boston Garden with a 3-1 lead in the semi-finals.

"I don't think it was the Bruins," said an unidentified woman. "People were yelling about the Red Sox and Yankees," she said.

While the consensus of the party-goers claimed the Bruin victory as the spark which blasted the evening into undaunted craziness, other offered explanations of releasing anxiety and tension in the form of youthful exuberance.

One woman spoke for many in the crowd when she said she had no idea how the party got rolling. "But," she added quickly, "I think it's absolutely wonderful."

And so did many. But there were others who were not so pleased over the surprise party. James Matlack, the Director of Southwest, was one person.

"I watched the Bruins game too," Matlack said, "But I didn't celebrate it in quite the same fashion. I'd just as soon not be here."

Southwest's version of a festival for Baccus — the mythological God of festivity — started innocently enough at about 11:45 p.m. with lights flashing from Kennedy and Washington accompanied by victory cheers for the Bruins. The shouters grew in number and began pouring out of the dorms and into the court yard. Then came the bonfire, toilet paper streamers and plenty of loud rock and roll. And before you could say catharsis, the most perverted, massive group therapy session was under way.

The event had the quality of spontaneous combustion as it formed, and a local pride bold as that of South Boston emerged.

"I heard it's getting rowdy in Northeast," said a woman watching a ping pong table being sacrificed to the fire. "But Southwest has 'em beat."

Perhaps the only regrets would come the morning after, noted one security guard while surveying the court yard filled with toilet paper. "I don't know how they're going to wipe their asses," he said.

More measures needed to protect against rape

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

[Editor's Note: This is the second part of a two part series on UMass women's fears of rape and what action the administration is taking to prevent rape on campus.]

UMass administrators are becoming increasingly aware of women's concern over the campus' safety, although most administrators say they feel women can be relatively safe if they are aware of their surroundings.

Director of Security, Saul L. Chafin, who is responsible for campus safety said that UMass women are in a safe environment but he can understand their worries. Chafin suggests that women keep their guard up when walking on campus at night and to always walk in pairs. "This is normal crime prevention," he said. "I would recommend it to any woman anywhere."

Many women on campus feel better lighting is needed on the pathways through our campus. Director of UMass Planning, H. Jack Littlefield, said that after the university received complaints about poor lighting in parking lots outside Boyden gym and near the Fine Arts Center rented light fixtures were installed.

Littlefield said the University doesn't have the funds for the extensive lighting needed around the paths on campus. "We keep going to the trustees and they keep going to the state," he said.

An appropriation was made however, for road work on Commonwealth and Governor Avenues with better lighting included on these roads. He said that campus lighting could be included in deferred-maintanance funding but could make no implementing commitment.

Littlefield suggested that students remain on the paths that have better lighting when walking at night.

Many women said an increase in police patrol is needed in addition to a better lit campus. As it stands now, security personnel on foot patrol are only used when there is a special need. Chafin cited an increase in crime in a given area, or especially large and boisterous social events as examples.

Chafin said there are usually three police cruisers at night. If there is a special circumstance, two or three security guards will patrol the campus by foot. Besides these, security guards are placed in the residential areas, the campus center, and Whitmore.

Chafin said he hopes to add five more guards who would work the 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. shift and patrol on foot.

Chafin said the security personnel also undergo awareness training dealing with rape as well as classes dealing with the prevention of violent crimes.

Chafin is recommending more lighting and increased patrol personnel in an upcoming report.

He said the students in Central area are planning a student escort service which would provide escorts to anyone uneasy about walking home at night. "I would like to see interested students getting involved in escort services and building security," he said.

The message to the women on campus from both administrators and the Rape Task Force is involvement and awareness. Involvement in Safety, the police say. And awareness of the existence of rape, the Task Force says.

Occupation 'infringes on Stockbridge yearbook'

Stockbridge Senate condemns occupation

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate last night unanimously voted to condemn the women occupying Collegian offices because it prohibits student access to organizations not affiliated with the Collegian. The women have occupied the Collegian offices for days.

Ron Johnson, editor of the Stockbridge yearbook said the yearbook is "a victim of circumstances. We're missing deadlines and it's costing us more money. The women are denying students the right to use those offices, namely, STOSAG, Index, Spectrum, and the Sporting Goods Co-op."

The senate continually stressed it was taking no position on the controversy between the occupiers and the Collegian. Geoff Macduff, senate president, said, "their business with the Collegian is not ours, but they're imposing on others."

In other business, Macduff stressed the necessity of Stockbridge student attendance at a Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors meeting Thursday at 6:30 p.m., 8th floor Campus Center. The governors reportedly plan to relocate the senate from its space in SUB 432 to SUB 428, thereby reducing their office size and also requiring the senate to share the space with Greek Affairs. Macduff said, "Bruce Belcher, chairperson of space allocations, visited our office a few weeks ago. At the time the office wasn't packed. I believe he thinks the office is not used to its fullest. The more people present at tomorrow's meeting, the better chance the senate has of keeping its present office."

The Senate also passed next year's budget, totaling $27,300, equivalent to last year's.

Israeli mourning day ends; 30th birthday party begins

JERUSALEM [AP] — Looking back on 30 years of achievement and ahead to political uncertainty, Israel ended a day of mourning for its war dead and began a 24-hour nationwide birthday party at sundown yesterday.

As Israelis started a round of picnics, street carnivals and flag-waving merriment in honor of Independence Day, Prime Minister Menachem Begin boasted that Israel has "massive strength" with which to confront its foes.

"Since the days of the Macabees 2,100 years ago the people of Israel has not been as rooted in our land as it is today," Begin said in a broadcast address to the nation, which declared its independence May 14, 1948, but celebrates the anniversary by the Jewish lunar calendar.

Begin also warned that Israel faces a "great struggle" in Middle East peace negotiations with Egypt.

President Ephraim Katzir said in another address that "first signs are appearing of chances for improving our relations with some of our neighbors...Although these negotiations are passing a crisis, we are firm in our belief that peace...will be achieved."

Defense Minister Ezer Weizman said at a memorial ceremony for war dead that "we are living through historic times, fraught with the prospect of change in Israel's relations with the Arabs."

After the festivities, the Israeli Cabinet is expected to get down to crucial discussions of new American ideas for bridging the gap between Egyptian insistence on total Israeli withdrawal from captured Arab land, and Israel's demand to keep military control of the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said in an interview he anticipates "a political breakthrough" this year. He would not elaborate.

With the memory of the March 11 highway massacre that killed 35 Israelis fresh in mind, 30,000 police and soldiers set up a massive security net to screen merrymakers from possible guerrilla attacks.

Before the celebrations began, memorial ceremonies in every town and village reminded Israelis of the bitter price of survival — 15,000 soldiers killed in four major wars and in thousands of border skirmishes and acts of terrorism.

UMass police are investigating a robbery which occurred at knife-point in Chadbourne dormitory Tuesday at 1 a.m.

A tape deck, money, and a "minute" amount of marijuana were stolen by several men who had visited the victim earlier that night, police said.

A Chadbourne resident said yesterday, "It's been one of several incidents in the dorm. There's someone going into rooms and stealing things."

Police said the incident was still under investigation.

William Harris, Chadbourne head of residence, said he didn't know anything about the incident.

A federal agent was in the Whitmore Administration building yesterday requesting information on a female student currently enrolled at UMass.

"Nothing was released except directory information," Dean of Students William F. Field said yesterday. He said the agent requested other information on that student which could not be released by the university. Field did not say what that information was.

Sidney Myers, legal counsel to the Chancellor, Dean Field and a UMass police officer met with the federal agent while he was making his requests.

Moro buried; top cop quits

ROME [AP] — Aldo Moro was quietly buried by his embittered family Tuesday in a secluded village cemetery miles from a mounting political furor over his assassination and from the continuing wave of urban terrorism besieging this nation.

Italy's chief police official, Interior Minister Francesco Cossiga, resigned in the face of the growing backlash of the government's failure to save Moro. In Milan, a four-member "kneecapping" team gunned down an industrialist. And in Turin an imprisoned leader of Moro's Red Brigades kidnappers ominously warned that the siege of terror is not about to end.

Four hundred mourners — all family members and friends — attended the funeral service in Torrita Tiberina, a village 30 miles north of Rome where the Moros had a house.

The widow and her children who had vainly appealed to the government to negotiate with the kidnappers in hopes of saving Moro's life, issued a terse statement after his bullet-riddled body was found Tuesday saying they wanted no state funeral or other public commemoration.

The government, nevertheless, scheduled a state funeral service for Saturday in Rome, without the body.

The white oak coffin holding the body of the slain former premier was driven by hearse from a Rome morgue Wednesday to the hilltop village where eight pallbearers, none of them family members, carried it to the 17th century San Tommaso Church for the simple funeral Mass.

In one of his last letters during 54 days in captivity, Moro, in despair over his fellow Christian Democrats' refusal to bargain with his Red Brigades kidnappers, requested that no party or government official attend his funeral.

Despite the family's expressed opposition to public mourning, millions of Italians paid homage to Moro Wednesday in rallies, work stoppages and quiet personal tributes.

Cossiga announced he was resigning "in order to ensure the necessary serenity" for a government review of its handling of the Moro case.

The Republicans, one of five parties supporting the Christian Democrat government, asked Premier Giulio Andreotti to summon a meeting of the five parties' leaders to discuss Cossiga's resignation and other problems linked with Moro's death and "the necessary severe struggle against terrorism."

Police in Milan said three men and a woman shot and wounded industrialist Franco Giacomazzi in the legs. The victim is an executive of the state-run Montedison chemical company.

The shooting had all the trademarks of an attack by the urban guerrilla Red Brigades, police said, but the Milan newspaper Il Giorno received an anonymous telephone call claiming the shooting was the work of the previously unknown "Armed Popular Communist Front."

In Turin, the founder of Red Brigades, Renato Curcio, disrupted court proceedings in his trial on sedition charges to shout a warning to the prosecutor, "You live outside of history. Perhaps you have not understood what has happened in these days or what will happen in the coming months in Italy."

Curcio, a one-time philosophy student, called Moro's assassination "an act of revolutionary justice, the highest act of humanity possible in this society without justice and divided into classes." He was dragged from the courtroom in chains after the outburst.

Authorities stepped up protection for prominent politicians and other likely targets of terrorist violence. Police pressed their all-out search for 20 wanted persons, including nine charged in arrest warrants with complicity in the Moro kidnapping.

Kelly to judge: 'stop subpoena'

BOSTON [AP] — An appeal by Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. to quash a subpoena issued for his appearance before a legislative investigating committee was taken under advisement by a justice of the state Supreme Court yesterday.

Justice Benjamin Kaplan after hearing an hour of argument in the case recessed the proceedings, giving no indication when he would have a decision.

Kelly, the chairman of the powerful Senate Ways and Means Committee, is scheduled to appear before a Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee Friday at 10 a.m.

The subcommittee is investigating payments made to state politicians by the New York consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto, which held a $6 million state contract.

The panel wants to question Kelly about a $1,000 payment made to him by MBM officials and $2,000 checks they say he solicited on behalf of Senate President Kevin B. Harrington and Boston Mayor Kevin H. White.

George A. McLaughlin Jr., Kelly's lawyer, asked Justice Kaplan to stay the subpoena at least until the case could be heard on its merits by the full bench of the high court.

He urged the full court to hear what he predicted would be a "landmark case," saying, "the last time the court spoke on this was 170 years ago."

He also claimed that the decision last week by Superior Court Judge Roger Donahue, upholding the committee's right to subpoena Kelly was "a clear error of law."

McLaughlin contended that Kelly's appearance before the committee would result in "a substantial constitutional confrontation" should the committee press the senator on issues related to his performance as a legislator.

He contended that such inquiries would violate Kelly's rights under the state constitution's speech and debate clause.

He said Kelly might be faced with either waiving his rights or invoking the privilege and facing a contempt proceeding for doing so.

Pair of eagles 'adopt' baby bird

ALBANY, N.Y. [AP] — In a dramatic attempt to save an endangered species, wildlife specialists have made the state's only pair of wild bald eagles adoptive parents.

And the results thus far have been encouraging.

"They seemed to show a natural caring immediately," said Peter Nye, chief of the endangered species unit of the state Department of Environmental Conservation.

The pair hasn't produced offspring in five years due to chemical contaminants such as DDT — which have resulted in thinner eggshells that almost always break during incubation.

Two weeks ago, a special state wildlife team took a two-week-old eagle that had been bred in captivity at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center in Maryland and placed it in the eagles' nest in a tall tree south of Rochester. They removed the egg that wasn't expected to hatch anyway.

"It was totally gratifying," Nye continued in a telephone interview yesterday.

"Within 45 minutes after we had left, the female eagle was back in the nest caring for the young bird. The tenacity that both are showing for this chick is just great. They're both caring for it extremely well — feeding it and keeping it warm and dry."

The aerie south of Rochester is the only bald eagle nest in New York state, according to Nye, who said the bird was once a common site, boasting a total of 63 nests in the state.

But in the 1950s and 1960s, heavy use of DDT to combat insects took its toll on the bald eagle as well. Like other majestic birds such as the peregrine falcon, the bald eagle injested the toxic substances by eating infested fish. The substance inhibited the production of a certain enzyme in the birds' liver which is necessary for calcium production, resulting in the thinner, easily broken eggshells.

DDT was banned several years ago. Two years ago, the department — in hopes of restoring the bald eagle to New York skies — began introducing captive-born eagles into the wilds from the Montezuma National Wildlife Refuge near Seneca Falls in central New York. The bird's food, normally supplied by the parent bald eagles, was supplied by humans, working discreetly so as not to be noticed by the birds. The technique is known as hacking.

Two eagles were hacked the first year and last summer five eagles were hacked. Four more are expected to be hacked this year. Eagles roam in a wide area of the country, normally returning to their birthplace to breed when they mature — at five years of age. State officials are hoping the eagles will return to the wildlife refuge in central New York as early as 1980.

But this is the first instance in the state — and one of the first in the nation — where a captive-bred bald eagle is actually being nurtured in the wilds by "adoptive parents."

State officials are optimistic that declining levels of contaminants in the environment, coupled with their program, will save the bald eagle.

"We do constant monitoring of all the food items of the bald eagle — at the nest, in the wintering area and in the area where we release them at Montezuma National Wildlife Refuge. The indications are that the contaminant levels are very low," said Nye.

"National research has shown that there's been a reproductive upswing associated with this declining level of contaminants," he added.

"We think the environment can definitely support these young eagles."

Agency orders AMC to recall 76 automobiles

WASHINGTON [AP] — The federal government yesterday ordered American Motors Corp. to recall most of its 1976 autos for exhaust system repairs, an action that could cost the smallest of the U.S. car companies $3.1 million.

The Environmental Protection Agency ordered the recall because of a faulty part that can allow high levels of nitrogen oxide to escape into the air, said the EPA's deputy administrator, Barbara Blum.

"This pollutant can contribute to breathing illnesses, chest pains, and bronchitis in children," she said. "It helps form smog, that all-too-familiar source of headaches, smarting eyes and coughing among city residents."

Blum in general took automakers to task for failing to produce effective emission control systems.

"Since 1972 almost 12 million — or one in five — new motor vehicles sold in the United States have been recalled because they were violating exhaust air pollution standards," she said.

"As a record of compliance with the law and as an expression of concern for public health, this marks a dismal showing by automakers," she told a news conference.

The AMC recall order involves 270,000 Hornets, Gremlins, Pacers and Matadors, the EPA said. The EPA also ordered AMC to recall 40,000 Jeeps and Post Office dispatcher trucks made in 1975 and 1976.

The only 1976 AMC autos exempt from the order are 21,741 cars manufactured for sale in California, where pollution standards are more stringent than in the other 49 states. But even these cars are under investigation for the same problem, the EPA said.

EPA said the defect involves an inadequately brazed joint in the back-pressure sensor, part of the exhaust pollution control system. This joint frequently breaks, the EPA said.

AMC said engine performance is not noticeably affected by the problem.

Curfew for men

To the Editor:

The following is an obvious and logical response to the question posed by the Collegian on May 8th, "What action should be taken against the increased violence against women on campus?"

The most effective security measure is a curfew — for MEN. Men should not be permitted on campus after sundown. They are a very real threat to the safety of women and their privilege of freedom of movement should be revoked until we can be assured that no more violence will occur on this campus. Since women are not raping and threatening men there is not reason why their evening activities should be hampered in any way.

If Whitmore wins . . .

To the Editor:

We are a group of students who want to save our education. If Whitmore wins, the students lose. By refusing the teacher demands, Whitmore has in effect, deprived us our rights as paying students the education we deserve. The faculty, in not receiving allocated funds, have begun to picket and protest the administration. Many of them have begun to seek other jobs at etter paying universities, which will downgrade the UMass quality of higher learning.

This affects you directly!

By the fall of 1978, our professors will be depleted to a level of inadequacy; graduate students, teaching assistants and assistant professors. Unless otherwise requested, your grades will be withheld from Whitmore which will cause you to have to straighten it out in the fall.

We need your support. The students will be picketing for their education with the teachers, Friday at noon. Come support your education and your rights.

Noise is a travesty

To the Editor:

We the Undersigned, members of the Greek Area of the University of Massachusetts, are very disturbed over the noise level of the residential areas on this campus.

On the night of May 9th the Southwest area was audible — from the Phillips St-North Pleasant St. area. From Fraternity-Sorority park, both the Sylvan areas and the Orchid Hill area could be heard.

In both cases yelling and screaming, blasting stereos, and general noise pollution filled the air.

We feel this noise is uncalled for and should be stopped. Besides, our pledges are having a hard time sleeping.

We feel that this noise is a travesty of our rights both as students and residents of the Town of Amherst.

If the dorms feel the urge to drink, smoke, and party all night and keep us, the normal students, awake, at least do it on the weekend ... like us!

Support faculty

To the Editor:

Will lack of student support cause the downfall of the faculty union? Jon Hite's editorial of 5-3 and Jay Martus' editorial of 5-8 certainly indicate their position on the matter. Rather than support the professors' demands for their 2.5 percent increase in pay, promised as of last February by the legislature to all state employees, Hite and Martus prefer to criticize the tactics of the M.S.P.

Why criticize the faculty when the administration walked out on the negotiations and, in fact, is notorious for negotiating in ad faith with faculty and students alike? We have seen, as students, that only direct action produces results in dealing with our elusive administration.

The issue at stake is academic freedom. Our professors need the guarantee that they will be evaluated on the basis of academic merit, not on the popularity of their views with the administration. Are we to entrust our education to educators or to administrators?

The faculty and students are the sole reason for this school's existence, and one cannot exist without the other. The administration merely provides the machinery necessary for the process of education. Students can only gain in supporting their faculty, likewise the faculty stands to gain by supporting the students in the fight against our common foe, those who would seek to cheapen the quality of education at this university.

The faculty's proposal to withhold grades is hardly an attack on students. Students who need their grades for non-university pursuits may obtain them. However, those of us remaining in this academic community must work to insure that the faculty's demands are met and that the unity between faculty and students increases. It is our education that is being threatened; it is our responsibility to preserve it.

Cartoon affects adminstrator

To the Editor:

I have several comments to make concerning the cartoon 'BROMERY'S CRISIS MANUAL'. In the entire thirteen years that I have been a staff member of this campus, nothing affected me more or sickened me as totally as that cartoon. I cannot believe that as many articles that have been written by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery dealing with the right to dissent, with the right to protest, and his exhibited decisions and positions on fair-play could have left anyune with enough disrespect to have devised such a dastardly optick display of the creator's personal opinion on just what the Chancellor's present position is.

I perceive the Chancellor's positional decision to not rush in to head off either the very legal protest by the Faculty and the very questionable occupation of the Collegian quarters by a feminine faction as adherence to principles on right to protest that he truly believes in.

In either case, any meaningful solution requires input and agreements from many parties. I say 'right on Brother Bromery'.

Thanks to stage crew

To the Editor:

This letter is an attempt to thank the stage crew for their hard work and determination on the 1978 Stadium Concert. Too few realize the work that went into the production of the music festival. Although very few of the students attended the show from the entire student population, the fact still remains that just as much if not more effort had to go into the building of the stage.

The stage was built entirely by our student stage crew and taken down after the show by the crew. Work on the stage began on Wednesday before the show and we were finished Sunday morning around five a.m. In that period of time there were a lot of missed classes, a sunburn and rain. The only reward we received from our work was the satisfaction of seeing the sun shine through the clouds Saturday morning and the stage completed in the end-zone.

In regards to the delay of the show, which seems to have been blamed on the crew, I have the following explanation: Due to the rain on Friday the sound company was unable to set up the equipment and do the standard sound check. It wasn't until Saturday morning that they could set up and test the system.

I find it very sad that more people didn't come to the stadium so the system could have been used to its fullest extent. For some people's benefit the sound system is owned by Pink Floyd and operated by their road crew. the system in full use is 85,000 watts, [yes, it could have sounded a lot better if we had a few more people]. Anyway, that's the breaks, rock'n'roll and that's all.

Thanks again to the stage crew and all the people who helped.

We will do it again next year but we hope the stadium will be full next time.

Why fire Marry

To the Editor:

On behalf of hundreds of students, I wish to formally protest the "termination" of John Marry of the Classics Department. It is very seldom that students have the opportunity to listen and learn from a man as articulate, knowledgable, and of as high caliber as John. The Classics department ought to reconsider their action, for John is in the true sense, an educator. He offers to us as students a broad perspective of life and all that it encompasses through his knowledge of history, which lends itself to a better awareness and understanding of today.

Do we as students really have a say as to who teaches us? Do student evaluations mean or prove anything? What must a teacher do to prove his credibility?

I think if students really did pull some weight in this university system, John Marry would still be employed next fall. Does he [at least] not have the right to know why he is out of a job?

I'm not as much sorry as I am angry that a man as highly thought of and respected by his students could be so easily cast by the wayside. I am outraged that some dirtbag administrator[s] have the last say concerning our education, and we the students are suppose to accept and conform to their decisions. We are paying for a good education and the best of the lot gets booted.

To the head honchos responsible — what goes around comes around...the name of the game is politics, and maybe John Marry just didn't want to play.

Katie Tyler-Scheurer

Wo-myn; not wo-man

To the Editor:

I was near the Student Union and overheard a woman voice her opinion about the Collegian occupation. The woman said: "I disagree with the occupation. They [the occupants] don't represent the majority of women on campus."

Yes, that seems to be the case. In fact the occupiers do not represent the wo-MAN at all, but most important, a separate, self-defined version: wo-MYN.

Fe-MALES who share the above attitude in disagreement with the occupation support the MAN in woman, and, in affect, the continued indoctrinating of a male-privileged society.

Senior shakes down Salt

By ROSS B. NERENBERG
[Class of '78]

As one of the select few UMass students to have been associated with Below The Salt (the weekly fine arts supplement to The Collegian) throughout the first four years of its existence, I've observed both its high points and its low points. I've seen Salt editors come and go nearly as fast as kegs of beer at Schlitzarama, but, throughout times good and bad, there were always enough of the "little people" (i.e., those whom space limitations prevent me from naming) around to ensure that relatively decent issues appeared each Thursday. There were always a number of highly dedicated individuals willing to work the long and arduous hours necessary to keep The Salt shakin'.

When, as a fretful freshman, I first hooked on with the publication in the fall of 1974, Michael Kostek was the reigning (and founding) Salt mind. As founding editor, The Salt lost little time in becoming an extension of his own personality (as subsequently happened under each successive editor). Seeing as how music was Mike's mantra, this meant that each issue was jam-packed with, among other things, music coverage chronicling the latest releases by everyone from The Dead to Dylan. Kostek's Salt was an organized effort which, owing to the zany stories and headlines, often came out looking just a wee bit disorganized. But there was always a feeling of purpose, and the faithful presentation of each week's issue enabled its readers to realize that The Salt served a need and would survive, which of course it has.

After Kostek graduated, aide-de-camp Tyla Michelove became editor in the spring of '75. She followed many of Kostek's practices, but handed over virtually total control of The Salt's editorial content to spacey Andy MacKenzie. MacKenzie, laboring under the pseudonym "Your Sacred Cowboy," turned The Salt toward more esoteric material. Anyone connected with the paper during this span of time will best remember Andy as the man who honestly believed and actively preached that Magma could become more popular than Elton John. This alienated some folks, but the M + M regime did make substantial progress in expanding The Salt's range of coverage into previously unexplored areas. And for those who claim that romance and journalism don't mix, Tyla later stepped through the door of matrimonital bliss with Jim Sawyer, ex-Salt theater editor.

Another old music staffer, Craig Roche, took over in the spring of '76. It was during this era that The Salt attempted to function as a "something for everybody" sort of publication with more space being devoted to politics and current events than ever before. Graphic appearance also improved and the paper was still a fun thing to work on. Music continued to be a main focus, but not the main focus.

The post-Roche Salt took on a totally different look in the spring of '77 when the torrid triumvirate of Mark Leccese, Ed McQuaid and Debbie Schafer gained control. Leccese was top man, but assistants McQuaid and Schafer made many of the real decisions as The Salt took on another new look, this time focusing heavily on the "fine" aspect of fine arts: classical music and concerts, theater, dance, books. Music as covered by previous Salt regimes became a thing of the past looked upon more as space filler than essential copy. Yet, The Salt continued to mature and make gainful strides. From time to time it even had a professional look about it.

The fall of '77 brought with it Leccese's resignation and Bob Armstrong and Rick Pioli eventually were named co-editors. Taking on the job in mid-semester was tricky — each weekly issue seemed to involve a life and death struggle to get things done correctly in time. Armstrong and Pioli were quick to discover that the task wasn't an easy one. A new character shot up over the horizon, Ken Shain, and by the end of the semester he had unofficially gained control. He officially obtained it in the spring of '78 (aided by Mary Brown, Collegian vet), stressing broader coverage of campus affairs and student run productions, attempting to develop and renew interest in participatory culture. In his own words, "I wanted The Salt to be the first rung on your ladder to super-stardom."

So, as you now sit back in Amherst, Boston, Washington, or wherever, I must assume that Mr. Shain will be keeping things shaking down in the Campus Center, Below The Salt. As a member of the graduating class of '78, I won't be around to see how it will all turn out. I am proud to say that I was a part of The Salt during its formative years, ages one to four. The Salt minds were always busy in the pursuit of putting the best possible fine arts paper into our hands. Sometimes they failed, sometimms they succeeded. But they always gave it their best. They always gave it the old college try.

Generation X
Chrysalis

Reviewed by PERRY ADLER

Highly-touted and much-awaited, Generation X's debut album is marred by an occasional thinness of sound. The band has only one guitarist, and boast "no session musicians" on the cover; they would benefit greatly from another guitarist, more overdubs, or simply higher volume on the rhythm guitar parts. Despite this flaw, though, this is still an impressive powerpop record.

The main influences at work here are the Who (the real classic on this LP is called "Your Generation") and especially Slade (but faster and minus some crunch). The tunes are all pretty strong; included are a version of John Lennon's "Gimme Some Truth", a song called "Youth Youth Youth" with the most crazed guitar solo I've heard in quite a while, and the first dub treatment of hard rock, "Wild Dub". And the singing is among the most accessible to be found in the New Wave.

Generation X's teen anthems are nowhere near as effective lyrically as the work of the Pistols or the Clash, as they tend to be overly self-conscious and sometimes downright embarrassing in their emphasis on "punks". But with a little better recording, they could be one of the best British punk bands, musically anyway.

Shakespeare

The National Shakespeare Company will perform Othello and As You Like It at the Fine Arts Center Hall on Thursday and Friday, May 11 and 12 at 8 p.m.

One of America's oldest touring organizations, the National Shakespeare Company will be celebrating its 15th anniversary this year. They are coming to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall as a special attraction of the Fine Arts Center Concert Series.

As You Like It, directed by Sue Lawless, will be presented on Thursday, May 11 at 8 p.m.

The romantic forest of Arden becomes the setting for one of Shakespeares most enchanting comedies, As You Like It. Antics of mistaken identity and unrequested love beset at least four sets of lovers in a play filled with kindliness, good fellowship, and good will.

Othello, directed by the company founder and artistic director Philip Meister, will be performed on Friday May 12 at 8 p.m.

One of Shakespeares four great tragedies is the dramatic tale of Othello.

In Othello, love triumphs over evil, hate, and treachery. From jealousy to political intrigue, Othello is filled with depth and suspense.

The National Shakespeare Company, a non-profit organization, has performed for audiences of over 250,000 per year in colleges, universities, and cultural centers across the nation. Each season a nine month trek takes the company from Florida to the Maritimes, from New York to California and Canada.

Tickets for the National Shakespeare Company production of As You Like It and Othello are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all New England Ticketron location. Prices are: General public — $7, 6, 5. UMass students — $3.50, 3, 2.50. Senior citizens and other students are $6, 5, 4. For more information, call the Fine Arts Center box office at (413) 545-2511.

Campus ready for Bernstein

The Leonard Bernstein Festival Of American Music, an unusual blend of symphonic masterworks, contemporary ballet, Broadway musicals, opera and jazz, will be held at the Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts at Amherst, from June 29 through July 23, 1978. Guest soloists at the festival include Lukas Foss, Florence Quivar, Eugene Fodor, Woody Herman, Maynard Ferguson, Thad Jones and Mel Lewis.

The festival will feature the works of Leonard Bernstein, the outstanding composer, conductor, pianist, educator and Massachusetts native son. The festival is being presented as a gesture of appreciation by the University of Massachusetts to Bernstein in acknowledgement of his outstanding contributions over the past quarter century to American performing arts.

Education will play a major role in the festival, reflecting Bernstein's concern for music education as expressed in his "Young People Concerts" series and the Norton Lectures at Harvard University. Education courses being offered are designed to help students as they work with professional musicians who will perform at the festival, and through "Workshops in Jazz."

Combining their resources on behalf of the Bernstein Festival will be the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center, the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and University Summer Session. Alan Light, concert manager of the Fine Arts Center will be festival director. Robert Gutter, conductor of the Springfield Symphony, will be musical director for the Festival.

The Festival Orchestra, a combination of professional musicians from the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and outstanding student musicians from throughout the United States, will perform the three symphonic concerts and serve as the pit orchestra for the performances of "West Side Story," "Trouble in Tahiti", and the Hartford Ballet. The Festival Orchestra will allow student musicians to work with professional musicians. Auditions for the Festival Orchestra will be held in New York, Boston and Amherst.

Guest soloists for the symphonic concerts include violinist Eugene Fodor, who will perform Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin, Strings, and Percussion" on July 8. Lukas Foss will be guest conductor and piano soloist in Bernstein's "Symphony No. 2 Age of Anxiety," on Friday, July 14. Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano Florence Quivar will conclude the festival on July 23 with Bernstein's "Symphony No. 1 Jeremiah."

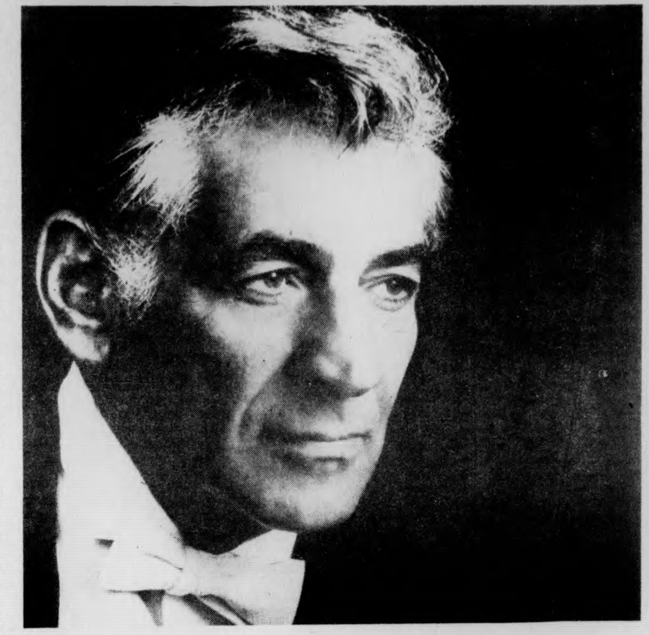
In addition, the three symphonic evenings will include Bernstein's "Symphonic Dance" from "West Side Story," "Three Meditations" from "Mass," "Suite from On the Waterfront" and works by Charles Ives, Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Guenther Schuller and a specially commissioned work for mezzo-soprano and symphony orchestra by Frederick Tillis of the University's music faculty.

The Leonard Bernstein Festival will open on June 29 with a professional production of one of Broadway's greatest musicals, "West Side Story," with music by Leonard Bernstein, book by Arthur Laurents, and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, based on a conception of Jerome Robbins. "West Side Story" will be performed in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8 p.m. and will run for four performances.

Bernstein's chamber opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," will open on July 12 for seven performances in the Fine Arts Center's Bezanson Recital Hall. Bernstein's only opera had its premiere performance at Brandeis University in 1952. It will be staged by Alan Light, and Judy Brown will be musical director.

Dance will be represented at the Bernstein Festival by the Hartford Ballet, with Michael Uthoff as artistic director. The company will offer two performances of works by American composers, including a world premiere ballet based on Bernstein's jazz piece, "Prelude, Fugue and Riffs." The Hartford Ballet will perform at 8 p.m. on July 15 and 16 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall and will be accompanied by members of the Festival Orchestra under the direction of Robert Gutter.

Because of Bernstein's love for jazz, the Bernstein Festival also will offer two great evenings of jazz. The first performance, on July 2, will feature Woody Herman and the Young Thundering Herd and The Buddy Defranco Quartet.



Composer and bandleader Maynard Ferguson and his Orchestra will perform at the concert hall on Sunday July 9. Also featured at this concert will be the Thad Jones — Mel Lewis Quartet. Jones, a trumpeter and composer, and Lewis, a drummer, are both of international acclaim. They will perform with bassist Rufus Reed and pianist Larry Willis. Both will come to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst prior to the concerts as part of the "Workshops in Jazz," one of the several educational endeavors of the Bernstein Festival.

The Leonard Bernstein Festival is expected to have a major economic impact on the area. Hotels, restaurants and stores should benefit from the influx of visitors drawn to the event.

Subscription tickets for the Festival will go on sale May 1, 1978. Discounts for students, senior citizens and large groups will be available. Information on tickets or any of the program on the Bernstein Festival may be obtained by calling the festival office at (413) 545-0022, or writing to: Leonard Bernstein Festival of American Music, 129 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01003.

Student productions wrap up stage season

By FELICIA GULACHENSKI

If you missed the performances of "The Fantasticks" at the Colonial Hilton Inn in Northampton during March, don't despair. The J.B. and Company production of the musical is back by popular demand and will be performed May 13 and 14 a 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall.

J.B. and Company is a group of players from the University Ensemble Theater and the UMass Music Theatre Guild. The Roister Doister Drama Society is sponsoring the troupe during its campus appearance.

"The Fantasticks" opened in New York in 1960 and has run over 7,000 performances. It is the longest running Off-Broadway show.

"The Fantasticks" is a story about youth, love, the world, and growing up. The musical examines what happens after the "happily-ever-afters" are said in fairy tales.

The Harvey Schmidt and Tom Jones score contains many well known songs including "Try to Remember", "Soon It's, Going to Rain", and "They Were You".

In her review of the J.B. and Company production, Martha Oravecz from the Daily Hampshire Gazette said, "A small, talented musical company has launched a dinner theater at the Colonial Hilton Inn with an enjoyable production of "The Fantasticks"....(the production) turns out to be a pleasant musical treat."

J.B. and Company is an experienced troupe of players. Benjamin V. Marshall directed the production. Judy Brown was musical director, and Eugene N. Niles was technical director.

Marshall is a graduate student in creative writing. Besides directing and choreographing shows for the UMass Music Theater (UMMTG), he was also musical director of the Off-Broadway production of "Delusions of Grandeur" and for the New York Lamb's Club production of "Celebration".

Judy Brown was the musical director for the University of Michigan's Summer Repertory Theater for three years before coming to Amherst eight months ago. Besides being musical director for this production, she was the musical director for UMMTG's "Two Gentlemen of Verona" last fall.

Brown is also the musical director for "Trouble in Tahiti," which will be presented in July as part of the Fine Arts Center's Leonard Bernstein Festival.

Eugene N. Niles plays the role of Mortimer, an Indian actor who specializes in dying scenes, and is the technical director. Niles has performed in a variety of shows for UMMTG, Amherst College, and the UMass Dance department. He is also the technical director at the Fine Arts Center and a technician and carpenter at the Cape Playhouse in Dennis, Massachusetts.

Other cast members include Catherine A. Carlston, Steve R. Scheerer, Suzanne McCarthy, Robert R. Putnam, Peter J. Tolan, Brian J. Murphy and Paris Finley.

Tickets for "The Fantasticks" are available daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Bowker Auditorium Box Office. Prices are $2,50 for students, and $3.00 for general admission. Proceeds will benefit the Roister Doister Drama Society. For reservations and information call 545-0783.

Chorale Schedule Announced

Chorale Concert

On Tuesday, May 16, 1978 in Bowker Auditorium, UMass the UMass Chorale and Chamber Singers will perform their European Tour program at the twelfth annual Spring Concert. The concert which begings at 8:00 p.m. has no admission charge.

The musical program includes a diverse repertoire of both a cappella and accompanied choral works extending from the Renaissance to the Contemporary period. Particularily noteworthy is Freedom, composed by the American composer and professor in the Department of Music at UMass, Dr. Frederick Tillis. Dr. Tillis dedicated the piece to the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Freedom was written in the two months following Dr. King's tragic death on April 4, 1968. The UMass Chorale will perform the piece as a special tribute to Dr. King on the ten-year anniversary of his death.

The Five College Chamber Soloists under the direction of Ronald Steele will assist in the performance of the Classical work of Joseph Haydn entitled Te Deum.

The late Renaissance will be represented by a poignant a cappella work of Claudio Monteverdi, Lagrime d'Amante al Sepolcro dell ' Amata, (Tears of a Lover at the Tomb of the Beloved). Johannes Brahms ushers in the Romantic period with his Double Chorus, Ich Aber Bin Elend, (But I am Afflicted). A more recent work Vinea Mea Electa by Francis Poulenc, the twentieth century French composer, will round off the program. The piece is one of four motets written in 1939 for the Season of Lent.

The UMass Chamber Singers, also under the direction of Dr. Richard duBois, will be performing a slightly different repertoire. The nine-member, all-male group will sing, among other pieces, Franz Schubert's Die Nacht and a Subian Folk-song by Johannes Brahms. They will also sing some traditional folksongs and Sea Chanteys including Shenandoah and Lowlands.

This Spring Concert will be the final American concert of the season. On May 29, 1978 the UMass Chorale and Chamber Singers will depart for their fourth concert tour of Europe.

Chorale Tour

On May 29 the University of Massachusetts Chorale and Chamber Singers will fly out of Logan Airport, Boston on a plane bound east. The two choral ensembles, under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois will be embarking on their fourth European Concert Tour. Performances are scheduled throughout the two week trip which will take them from London to Paris with a side trip to Versailles than on to Lucerene, Switzerland and Innsbruck, Austria and finally into Munich.

The UMass Chorale is composed of seventy students, the majority of whom are not music majors. The students will be paying their own way for the bulk of the tour expenses, with some aid from their fund-raising activities. In April the group sponsored a raffle and throughout the year they have undertaken ushering responsibilities at the Fine Arts Center to help pay some of the group costs.

Now in its twelfth year of existence, the UMass Chorale sings around the Pioneer Valley as well as going on an annual Spring Tour of Massachusetts and New England. The group performs a wide assortment of choral music, mostly a cappella ranging from the Renaissance to Contemporary period.

The Chamber Singers is an all-male group, presently with nine members. They also concentrate on a cappella work with music from Schubert to Shenandoah.

The last U.S. performance before the European Tour will be on May 16, 1978 at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, UMass and ther is no admission charge.

Pan- Afrikan, Hampshire dance in review

Hampshire Student Dancers In Concert

Reviewed by SHARON TRUE

There must be a less-overused, more precise word than "interesting" to describe the dance concert Hampshire College dance students and faculty gave last Thursday, May 4 at the Dickinson Performing Arts Center — intriguing, pleasing, stimulating, amusing maybe, or a combination of these words.

To use these words as a starting point, among the most intriguing I think were "Twilight," (choreographed by Susan Seizer), "No Piece," (Karen Lindhauer), and "Duet," (Eleanor Huston, of the dance faculty).

"Twilight" was fascinating and frustrating at the same time, and ended much sooner than I would have wanted it to. Susan sits on a stool, performing a dazed, blinking movement sequence facing front, side, and back, while a boy crosses and recrosses a balance beam behind her and a man squirms worm-like toward her from the front. It was difficult to concentrate on the dialogue Susan wrote that was recited during the dance — the only words I remember are silkworm, unraveling, and twilight. Still, a powerful, surreal effect was created, like seeing the inside of a tormented mind.

"No Piece" had not one, but many tormented minds. Five women, wearing black dresses, hideous nylon masks, and bells do cluthing, groveling, and rocking movements while chanting or moaning. At one point, while they're lying down arms, legs, and heads push upward, as if straining for freedom from the grave. Nightmarish music (Karen Lindhauer and John Zieman) completed the eerie mood. My one regret was that a brief solo danced with a filmy shroud introduced a new idea, a new movement quality to the dance that wasn't developed any further.

Although the actual movement Eleanor Huston and Diane Madden did in "Duet" was boring (lean, walk, stop; lean, jog, stop; lean, lower to the floor, roll over, stand, plus variations) the way they sensed each other's energy, moving side by side in perfect synchronization — Siamese twin-like — held your attention, scrutinizing for the slightest misstep. The piece, unconventional in its repetitive movement, long duration, grey sweatpants and sneakers costume, and in its self-contained, un-audience-conscious ambiance, was trying for the audience, but it was well-performed and...well, interesting in its boringness.

I found "Antenna" and "Women at Sea" happy and satisfying. The choreography (by Marta Koch) was tight structurally, the dancing was well-performed and flowed smoothly. "Antenna" was a dance about transmitting signals, kinetic energy signals, between three dancers — Marta, Jill Esterson, and Stephen Petronio. The dance is fast-paced; twitchy sometimes, strong and full-bodied othertimes. I especially liked the sharp-intake-of-breath signal, the surprise of Marta suddenly swinging Stephen around and around by the waist, the revolving in place at different speeds section, and the twitching movements transmitted from dancer to dancer. "Women at Sea" seemed to be a before, during and after journey dance. The first part has the four white-trousered women dancing boisterously, kicking high, jauntily hooking thumbs under their armpits. Then, in a slow horizontal crossing, the movement becomes yearning, with reaching arms and torsos, and anxious, darting looks. Finally the women rejoice, having made it ashore.

Francis McClellan, also on the dance faculty, choreographed "Sketch for Three Figures" and "One Hundred and One Very Dancy Counts With Walking Refrain," and indeed "dancy" is a good word to describe her movement style in these works. Francia's solo in "Sketch" was bursting at the seams with movement that used all parts of the body, but that only travelled back and forth "on the diagonals" (while Laurie Horwitz travelled ever-so-slowly "on the horizontal" and Susan Seizer sat eating "on the spot"). The movement seemed too frantic and rushed for the easy-going Fleetwood Mac music, however. Likewise the alternately lyrical and percussive movement in "One Hundred and One" (for eight dancers) seemed to want to break loose from the restrictions of space, counts, and technique.

"R!andom Die" (Susan Seizer) was a structured improvisation, using music randomly selected by a time-keeper from the F-M band on the radio, and movement patterns determined by the throw of a die. The improvisations done to Muzak and the ball game were particularly amusing, and made this dance an audience favorite.

"Amigos. .," and "The colored leaves are but sadder, unwanted in the Autumn" (Sally Kaplan), "Trio" and "Quartet," (Eleanor Huston), "For those of you who are not listening to the sea this Friday morning" (Jill Esterson) and "The Last Dream" (Marta Koch) were also presented in this refreshing, creative, really interesting concert.

An Evening Of Pan-Afrikan Theater

Reviewed by SHARON TRUE

This review cannot do justice to the Evening of Pan-Afrikan Theater presented in Bowker Auditorium May 2nd (a benefit performance for the 11th World Festival of Youth and Students in Havana, Cuba), for to do it adequately would require a greater awareness of the struggles and strengths of the black community than I have (as well as more space). Still, this extraordinary performance deserves whatever notice I can give it.

Most striking about the 23 music, dance, and vocal presentations of Afrikan culture in the Diaspora (Afrikan culture as it appears in all the countries throughout which Afrikans are dispersed) was the sense of the spiritual, the traditional, and the communal. Outstanding in this respect were "Fire Dance," (Pierre Barreau), the drum-accompanied poetry of Sharlene Dickinson and M. Shareef Rasool, Chris Henderson's "Clan," played on the balafons, "My Lord, What a Morning," sung by Pamela Benn, "The Knife Dance". (Pierre Barreau and Eno D. Washington), "Could You Believe," sung by the young and talented Eon John, and the final circular procession of drumming and dance with all the performers on stage.

Eno in particular dances as one possessed — his movement is proud, strongly centered, virtuosic (but un-self conscious), and beautiful. His style ranges from black interpretive dance, to street dance, to ritual dance, and his dancing is so evocative it takes you places — a warm tropic night around a fire, a dance hall in the city.

Pamela Benn is a multi-talented woman. Her song "My Lord, What a Morning" and her dance "Four Women" were both deeply moving. Chirs Henderson is another artist possessed — he by his music. Ima Henderson's story-telling was wonderfully expressive. And these are just a few I could mention.

The program was not without flaws — the sound system was poor, the lighting not well coordinated, the program overly long, some pieces under-rehearsed. However, the evening left me with questions, provoking questions I think indicative of having experienced true art: How is it that the Afrikan spirit has managed to survive in the face of all obstacles? Why aren't black people sufficiently recognized for their enormous contribution to our culture? And why is it that a professional artist as gifted as Eno D. Washington (one among many black artists) must struggle to survive in this community?

Summer sounds on horizon

Eddie Hinton
Very Extremely Dangerous
Capricorn

Reviewed by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

When all those punk and disco records that have been such a fad for the last season or two wind up in the used record bins sometine around this time next year, you can be sure it'll be Eddie Hinton who'll be doing all the shakin' and hollerin' for your record spendin' scratch. Spearheading a soul music revival, this former session guitarist has a sound that'll re-Memphisize Memphis and make self-expression music the fashion again. No falsetto here with Eddie belting out a sound not heard since the death of the immortal Otis Redding, and fronting a band that is sure to get the new wave of soul a'rolling.

"We made a deal, a long time ago" shouts Eddie in "I Want It All," the way singers did before the sheep started dressing like wolves, before Big Bad Bill was Sweet Cousin Williams. Eddie's not talking ruffles here, no sir, he's talking bridges and sings up a feeling in "You Got Me Singing," and "Brand New Man," that'll even get you turning back the pages of the history books for a clue as to why this pre-psychedelic sound didn't stick around.

I'm sure Capricorn Record's President Phil Walden has high hopes for this one. The "father of country-rock," as he is known in the music business for his pioneering work with the Allman Brothers, was Otis Redding's road manager back in the early sixties. Can Very Extremely Dangerous be Phil's revenge on an industry that killed a singers sound along with the singer? One listen to Eddie do Otis' "Shout Bamalama," will give you more insight than you can handle about the nature of a rapidly rising southern record company that got it's start by exploiting the sound of white folks.

The Dixie Dregs
What If
Capricorn

Reviewed by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

This month's uppercut in Capricorn's one-two punch combination is a new album by a group that produces the most original sound in recent American musical history. Hybrid beyond fusion, the Dregs sound a bit like "Vassar Clements meets Yes meets Weather Report" and defy categorization in that embodied in their synthesis is a real musical contribution. Melding violins (excuse me, fiddles) with synthesizers and the standard rock combo instruments and integrating rock, jazz, classical, country and bluegrass forms into a single cohesive sound, the Dixie Dregs do a lot to prove the meaning of the old saying, "What's in a name?"

"Travel Tunes," the showcase number on the album, says it all; around the world in 4 minutes and 37 seconds complete with Zawinulesque refrains punctuating the Jeffbeckian landscape creating images from Morocco to Molucca to Macon and back. "Odyssey," another tune with a geographic consciousness manifested within its structure, finds us listening to an ear-opening duet between electric guitar and violin (excuse me, fiddle) while "Little Kids," demonstrates the groups sensitivites to the acoustic innocences of childhood. Coupled with Eddie Hinton's Very Extremely Dangerous, What If makes for the best KO punch of the season in a business where if you don't knock 'em out, they cut you out.

Pere Ubu
The Modern Dance
Blank
Wire
Pink Flag
Harvest

Reviewed by PERRY ADLER

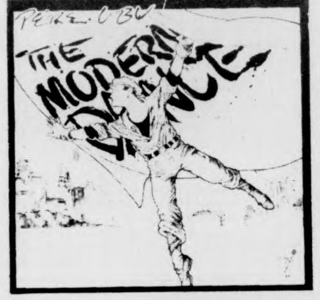
These are two of the weirdest records to come out of the New Wave. Definitely not for people who don't want to expand their musical horizons, they might be just the thing for those bored with conventional rock.

Pere Ubu takes normal beats, riffs and progressions and overlay them with shrieking vocals and atonal instrumental squeals. Their lyrics are often unintelligible, so it's hard to pinpoint the effect they're trying to convey. I find their music too ugly for my taste most of the time, but in certain angry moods it feels right. And "Over My Head" (need I say not Fleetwood Mac's) is an eerie song that always sounds good. It would be advisable to start with one of their earlier independent singles, which are easier to get into (especially "Final Solution").



Wire's record is a single album with 21 songs, most of which are very short. Some of them are catchy tunes, some mesmerizing drones, and some just junk punk. The lyrics this time are printed on the inner sleeve, but they're still difficult to figur3 out because they're in an obscure, impressionistic style. There's more I can appreciate in this record than in Pere Ubu's, but it can still be hard to take in more than small doses. If you're looking for something really different these records may suit your purpose. But (on the whole), I think I prefer "You Light Up My Life". Proceed at your own risk.

Hounds
Unleashed
Columbia

Reviewed by PERRY ADLER

The cover may lead you to expect punk rock, but what we have here is just one more heavy metal record. The Hounds are part of Chicago's New Wave; their demos were big radio hits there. To be fair, they are good musicians, technically, and a couple of their songs ("Drugland Weekend", "When the Boppers Turn to Rockers") sound refreshingly like Mott the Hoople (a little too blatantly for them to dare list Mott among the influences mentioned in their press release). But most of their material is merely more faceless cliches.

Face it, this genre's dead (artistically, anyway; Circus readers are gonna keep on buying the stuff until radio is dragged kicking and screaming out of 1971). The inspiration of even the best older bands (like Aerosmith or BOC) is flagging, and if the future of rock'n'roll is Kiss clones like Van Halen I'm converting to disco. Aren't you sick of plodding rhythms, obnoxious vocals and endless guitar jerk-offs yet? There is plenty of truly exciting music being made these days, but if you don't start supporting it soon you might not have the chance later on. Take a chance on the Sex Pistols or one of the other real punk groups and see if it doesn't blow this shit completely away.

Lay down your sorrows and dance!

by R. MOUSE

I and I would like to introduce you to the Loose Caboose Band and the positive vibration it is spreading throughout New England and under Jah's sun, May 13 in the Quad at UMass.

Together for two years now, the Caboose is building an ever-growing following of friends and music lovers. People who love to dance and have a good time are finding the pulse of our music irresistible and we in turn are finding as much pleasure in pleasing them.

As musicians, we have chosen to distill the most positive elements of contemporary and past genre's and simmer them into our own distinctive sound. Reggae, R&B, Jazz, Blues, Rock n' Roll, and latin music are the springs from which our inspiration is derived.

This vision, coupled with many collective years of sweat and professional dues paying on the concert, college, and club circuit, and in the recording field, drive us toward our goal of creating an atmosphere in which a good time can be had by all.

The band's members are: Allyn Dorr on vocals, bass; Jim Cheney on drums, guitar; Boo Pearson on congas, percussion, vocals; John Bullock on vocals, congas, percussion; Dave Boatwright on vocals, guitar, harmonica; and Jonathan Dorr on vocals, guitar.

Our motto; lay down your sorrows and dance!

Women's pages needed

By CHRIS DECKER

The Collegian's current compromise proposal offers a guaranteed 40 column inches per day for women's news. Certainly, this is a step upward from their original offer of 30, and it is only 2-3 of a foot less than the 48 column inches that the women's community is demanding. Nevertheless, I think that when the Collegian focuses attention on the amount of women's news space, their proposal emerges as a beau geste of sorts that effectively distracts the public eye from what has been the crucial issue all along, and that is the matter of editorial control by the women's editor over women's news.

While looking good in print, we feel that the Collegian proposal is in reality a trap that would immerse the Women's Editor in nightly haggling over the placement and inclusion of women's news. The proposal is structured as a 3-against-1 system that would force the Women's Editor to continually deal with men's problems about women's problems and which would thereby impede the exercise of her primary function, which is to provide high-quality women's news. In addition, we feel that women's news pages ought rightfully to be a forum for the expression of all women's voices and have accordingly suggested construction of an interviewing board that would select subsequent women's editors without maximal input from the women's community at large; the Collegian has vetoed this proposal.

Feminists have pointed out three distinct steps that oppressed groups must take once we realize the denial of freedom of speech that has been our lot at the hands of the rich, white, male, heterosexual powers-that-be. The first step is the recognition of that power differential and the ways in which the mass media is used as a tool to keep us in our place.

The second step occurs when oppressed groups refuse to participate in such a self-defeating system and refuse, too, to be set against each other by those in positions of power and against whom our anger should appropriately be directed.

The third step is integration, in this case of women's news in the Collegian. While this is our eventual goal, we feel that the treatment of women and women's news in the media is a direct reflection of the male view of women generally and that "integration," in the media or elsewhere, is only possible when women are accorded the status of full human beings.

Before we can integrate, we must first unify; we must sense our own identity and feel our own power as we define it and not as the oppressor defines it. It is up to the oppressed, not to the oppressor, to determine when integration is finally possible. Until the Collegian staff, who are clearly acting as oppressors, recognizes the significance of women's news, the need for women's pages is imperative.

e Last Aurevoir

have to be a flipping don in philosophy if you hope to attend university there, I had always thought Hegel was something to fight gacid indigestion with. As for Nietzsche — best linebacker in football in the middle sixties. You didn't see Butkus leading the Bears to three straight NFL championships, did you?

And as I wasn't too keen on coming back to the States sounding like a rerun of "Upstairs, Downstairs," muttering "Pip, pip, where are the 'orses?" and "The Queen wears striped knickers," I settled on France. After all, fifty million Frenchmen can't be wrong. Which is another thing: they hate to lose arguments. The hesitant pause on the part of your conversant, betraying the fact that he is suddenly aware that you are right and he is wrong, is as unknown to the Frenchman as the San Diego Padres.

"To generalize," William Blake said, "is to be an idiot." I disagree. First of all, William Blake is dead. And secondly he wasn't much of a traveller, so he didn't have to cope with the difficulties of describing a national character in sixty typewritten lines. I mean it's all very well to sit around polishing the ivory and composing silly proverbs about how "you never know what is enough unless you know what is more than enough," and so on, ad nauseum, but what if you've got a deadline to meet, a public to please, and an editor to brownose to? No day at the beach, you get me Blake?

Sorry if I've gotten somewhat off the beaten garlic path, but I have a grudge to settle. Not like me to go about keeping it inside. Get a cold on the liver otherwise.

Mind you, slapping generalizations on the French is like trying to eat lemons without grimacing. For they are foremost in contradiction. They are honest, yet the rate of tax fraud in Europe is higher in only Italy; thrifty, yet blowing billions on nonsense like Concorde; brimming with militant ideas, yet the reforms after May 68 were paltry. They are ninety percent Catholic, twelve percent of whom go to church; anti-semitic, yet the country has taken in the most Jews in the world since the second World War (including the U.S.); scandalized by the race problems in our country while Portuguese and Maroccan immigrants sweep out the gutters.

But Suzy, when you do come to France, you can be sure of one thing. Do not expect a Frenchman to change a hundred franc note if you buy anything for under fifty francs. He will look at your daggers, ask you snottily why is it that you do not have the exact money, and then in his world-weary way, somehow gather your change from the register, keeping fifteen percent to himself as "service compris". And, when you leave the shop, he will not say "Have a nice day". For he has forgotten WWI, WWII, the Marshall Plan, and our dough-boys burying a couple of Kaisers. He is as haughty and disdainful as ever.

And I hope it will never be otherwise. For, like any truant school boy, he doesn't want compassion; he only wants to be understood. Until June, Suzy.

many. Carter is anxious to keep Jews in the Democratic fold in the elections of '78 as well as his own re-election effort in 1980. At a time when national polls are rating his job performance at low levels rivalling only Nixon's, Carter cannot afford to lose the Jewish bloc.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat is deserving of a vote of confidence from the United States. He did, after all, make the bold move of initiating the peace talks. Negotiations have recently hit a low point, and Carter is seemingly shifting toward stronger support of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Nevertheless, Israel and the Arab countries are foes, and critics question the logic of supplying opposing sides with arms.

The cornerstone of the deal is Saudi Arabia. Carter can publicly support arms sales to Israel and Egypt on the grounds that they are our allies and they are seeking peace. The situation with Saudi Arabia is much more complicated. Officials in the Saudi Arabian government hinted that if the arms deal did not come off, they would not be particulary inclined to keep holding down the price of oil. Congress realizes this, which is why Sen. Robert Byrd announced that the arms sale bill will pass the Senate. The Saudi Arabians have us, strengthened out over an oil barrel.

The only solution to this type of blackmail is to immediately switch to non-imported forms of energy. Congress must stop catering to oil and gas companies and pass a comprehensive energy bill. Jimmy Carter should reverse his priorities and allocate more money to solar studies (now $285 million)' as well as other alternative forms, and less to costly and hazardous nuclear research (now $4 billion).

Without emotion

frank denton

Apathy is the latest of a series of choice vindictives to grace our concrete abode. The Greek root means simply "to be without emotion." This has been exaggerated by bleeding hearts and aching activists to describe "to be without action."

To be absolutely truthful, apathy connotes neither of these things in the contexts of campus. Apathy at UMass signifies disagreement with the self-appointed representatives of justice. It signifies a reluctance to indulge the ferocious egos of flint-faced, soft-bellied orators. One could conceivably call it disgust.

Political disinterest is actually the least of our problems, however. Three weeks — hence — this microcosm of mock competence will lose all relevance to most of us. The apathy we should be concerned about is not over faceless classes of people. It is the lack of regard displayed toward individuals.

For instance, I hear stentorian protest about the state which prisons are currently in. Most of the plaintiffs, though, have never cared enough to visit the individuals residing therein. They have not been bothered enough to follow the careers and afflictions of the incarcerated. When we make our luscious lumps, we are simply defacing the little people; we can empathize, but somehow we cannot touch.

Issues themselves are ways to impersonalize our approach to humanity. Very little effort is required to discuss China in liberal enlightenment. Should one offer suggestions about topics a little closer to home, however, sparks will fly. Ask a communist friends for a buck or an editor to turn down his/her stereo. The resulting discourse would queer the entrails of a grizzly.

Unbearable apathy is not confined to abstracts. Perhaps the most striking examples of apathy are found not academically, as one might expect, but physically. Nearly every one of us can name three friends whose minds have turned into mush after tuning in to euphorics, psilocybins, and Saturday morning cartoons. Most of us have gone to pot, whether we smoke it or wear it.

This is the ultimate result of doing something when the "feeling got right." Only later do we ask ourselves whether we feel alright now that it is over. The pity is that we really do not care. We continue to be the fattest people in the world, the least satisfied people in the world, the drunkest people in the world.

Whitmore is capitalizing on this disregard for our persons. They are, in fact, condoning it. The only concern we hear from that sector is that their forms are not folded, spindled, or mutilated. Meanwhile our minds mold, kindle, and mutate.

At this point, many of us are asking what we have gotten from this semester, year, or college career. The intricate details of our accumulated wisdom will be forgotten. our escapist herbs, fungi and beverages will be consumed in short order. The people, however, will not dissolve. With these is where our priorities should lie.

Apathy is not the antithesis of action of emotion. Apathy is a lack of care. Most of us are rather slow on the draw when it comes to expressing how we really feel. This is because we care too much for our self images, which is wrong. Our neighbors need more care than our images ever will. What do you care about: the people or their positions?

Letters

'Hypocritical ,racist sincerity'

To the Editor:

To begin with Ms. Litwack [regarding your letter of Tues., May 9th], who are you to judge whether morally or spiritually the concert suceeded or not. Attendance does not equate with moral or spiritual success, these are individual reactions.

Secondly, this school has never been and is not now approximately 7 percent Black.

And to take it upon yourself to assume that because of the fear of being called racist the white population allowed the Festival to take place is a total absurdity. If you read the Collegian daily, I'm sure you saw many letters [for and against] from members of the white population concerning the Festival. There also happened to be many within the white population who worked very hard to bring about the Festival, and for the same reasons Third World students supported it, not out of fear but because they believed the Festival would be a cultural, spiritual, and very enjoyable experience.

You, yourself, stated that "the caliber of music was highly commendable and the afternoon spent was most enjoyable." I fail to understand how you could have had an enjoyable afternoon if you spent your time counting the percentage of Black and Third World students who attended the concert. With so many people coming and going, you must have been quite busy. And while you were counting, did you include the many Third World students behind the scenes [hospitality, security, stage crew, etc.]?

Thank you Ms. Litwack for a most hypocritical, racist, yet sincere letter.

Issues must not be ignored

To the Editor:

I'm glad the question of "women's pages" has been aroused. It is a necessary, healthy step to discuss the need for women's voices and the need for women to control these voices.

Yet I find myself torn between the demands of the occupiers and the proposals of the Collegian editors and staff. In an April 19 article to the Collegian, Julie Melrose explained the reasons for the first occupation:

> "At face value, it might seem that the struggle was truly only one of how space in a particular publication was to be allocated. In fact, that was only the material form of the real struggle: the struggle of women on campus to gain speech and hence power."

Now the real struggle is larger than the "struggle of women on campus to gain speech and hence power." In the "Occupation Manifesto," published May 8 by the Women's Occupation Support Committee, we are asked to keep "sight of the fact that the issues extend beyond this particular group of women, this paper, and this university." Indeed the national and international support indicates how far the issues reach. The issues are questioning the existing political structure and the access to that structure.

The occupiers state their demands as "a minimum of space and adequate coverage of news for women, and total editorial control of those pages by women," and will not settle for "a little piece of the pie." I think these are legitimate demands. I become confused, however, because I do not see how the recent proposal of 40 column inches daily, under the editorial control of the women's department, represents goals different than those the occupiers demanded. Forty inches is the minimum requirement for news concerning women; it does not preclude additional coverage.

Even if news is kept at the forty-inch requirement, this would come to two thirds of a page daily — roughly equivalent to the four, seventy-five percent ad free, weekly pages which the occupiers are demanding. By having the information dispersed throughout the newspaper, I think readers could not bypass issues concerning women as readily as they could if these issues were concentrated in one area.

If people become accustomed to seeing issues about women throughout the paper, I think it will be easier to reach the ultimate goal of commonality which will make both 40 inch daily requirements and four weekly pages outmoded concepts.

Bonnie Kaplan

Not just women's issues

To the Editor:

We are writing to express our disapproval of labeling four pages of the Collegian "Women's News." We are adamant supporters of women's rights. We feel that there should be a mandatory minimum amount of women's news integrated throughout the paper.

Why label the contents "women's news"? Why alienate these important issues once they are in the paper? We feel that this designation defeats the entire purpose: to increase awareness of women's interests throughout the community.

Issues such as birth control and rape concern men as well as women. These are not only women's issues. Men need to know the dangers of the Pill. Men need to know that they, too, suffer from the sociological effects of rape.

We feel that the majority of women on this campus see working with men as our most effective option — women's new should be integrated, not segregated!

Kathy Koffler
Cindy Laquidara
and 5 others

Pages an imperative

To the Editor:

We the members of the governing body of Cance House, do hereby wish to show our support of the demands made by the women's community to the Collegian. We also support the possitive action taken to insure the implimentation of those goals.

Because of a need for women to form an identity and communication system with one another, there must be a separate women's page. Under the Collegian's final proposal, the fulfillment of this need is impossible.

It is imperative that women have complete control of women's news. The Collegian implication that the women's editor would have control over what is or what is not printed is misleading, when in fact, ultimate control lies in the hands of the Editor-in-Chief.

US rep says he's cleared of child abuse charges

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Congressman Edward P. Beard, a critic of Rhode Island's child welfare agency, said yesterday he was cleared of his mother-in-law's child abuse charges by the same state department.

In a telephone interview from Washington, Beard said the charge had been discussed in political circles since it was made seven months ago by his mother-in-law, Gladys Tarlaian.

"The bottom line is this: my mother-in-law, who has been basically a 'buttinsky,' has brought many, many hardships on us to try and divert the attention of my son away from us to her," Beard said.

"The end result is that she was not satisfied with the way we were bringing him up...and she filed charges in the welfare agency and they made an investigation and they found nothing wrong."

The congressman, a Democrat who is seeking a third term this year, said the Child Welfare Division of the state Department of Social and Rehabilitative Services handled Tarlaian's complaint.

"They suggested, and they told her this, the best thing that could happen is that she stay away from the house," Beard said. "The end result is that she stayed away. I haven't seen her in a long time."

Tarlaian said that while she discussed her feelings at length with a state social worker last September, she did not believe that amounted to a formal complaint.

She said Beard's 13-year-old son, Eddie Jr., has been rejected by his parents "since he was born" and the congressman "never has time for him."

Beard's wife, Marsha, said her mother "broke down loyalty and unity within the family" by second-guessing disciplinary measures taken by her and her husband.

"It got to the point where we told her to stay away from Eddie," Marsha Beard said, adding that Tarlaian threatened she would get even for refusing her access to the youngster.

Beard, a former house painter and amateur boxer, recently called for the firings of two top SRS officials for not doing a background check on the head of firm that set up group homes for the state.

The congressman said the firm's director, Dr. William F. Pepper, was accused in a congressional hearing during the late 60s of sexually molesting two New York City boys who were under his care.

James Riley, assistant director of SRS, refused to discuss the charge against Beard because state law prohibits commenting on such matters.

Beard, however, said he was making the episode public in an effort to end gossip by politicians and "lower-echelon" SRS employees. He also said he wanted to point out that his criticism of SRS officials had nothing to do with his mother-in-law's complaint.

"I would be the last one to investigate an agency if I did something wrong and they had something on me," Beard said. "That's because they could really put me in the bag.

Itching for a Big Mac? the sauce may cause it

BOSTON [AP] — Doctors warn that the sauce spread on McDonald's Big Mac hamburgers can cause an attack of swelling, itching and shortness of breath in people who are allergic to it.

The doctors said the sauce on Big Macs contains a food additive called gum tragacanth that researchers have known since the 1940's causes a strong allergic reaction in some people.

Four physicians at McGill University Teaching Hospital in Montreal issued the warning in a letter published in last weeks issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

McDonald's responded that gum tragacanth is used in a myriad of foods and is considered safe by the Food and Drug Administration.

The McGill doctors said that in one case, the reaction to Big Mac sauce was "life threatening" to a 35-year-old woman who was stricken while eating one of the hamburgers.

The patient was rushed to a Montreal hospital with shortness of breath, itching, abdominal pain and a hive-like swelling of her face, arms and trunk.

Phil Gold, one of the McGill doctors, said the woman was having trouble breathing because her larynx was nearly swollen shut. However, she quickly recovered after she was given medication.

The doctors said they did not know how many people are allergic to the sauce ingredient.

"I don't think it is an overwhelming common problem," Gold said in an interview. "Otherwise, we'd see it a lot more often."

Gold said he knew of one other case at his hospital in which a patient had a similar reaction to the sauce.

The doctors conducted skin tests on the woman to see if she was allergic to other Big Mac ingredients, such as beef, garlic, mustard, tomato and sesame seeds. But only the gum tragacanth produced a reaction.

Douglas Timberlake, a spokesman at McDonald's headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill., said, "Gum tragacanth is a substance common to many salad dressings as a stabilizer and a thickener, and there is no evidence that it is either dangerous or harmful."

However, he added that the matter would be investigated by McDonald's Quality Assurance Department.

The McGill doctors said the additive was once used as a filler in pills. But that practice was stopped in the 1940s when doctors found that some patients were allergic to it. They cited a 1949 study that said other symptoms of the allergy may include bronchial asthma, rash and nasal congestion.

In Washington, the FDA said gum tragacanth which is derived from Middle Eastern mountain shrubs, is used to make baked goods, relishes, meat products, gravies, juices and processed fruits. Emil Corwin, a FDA spokesman, said the agency had not received any complaints about it.

Men's crew go to Philly to compete

By ANDY BLUME
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's crew team left Amherst at 10:00 this morning to head down to Philadelphia for their biggest race of the year: the Dad Vail Regatta.

The Dad Vail is one of the most prestigious races in the country for second division teams. Crews from as far away as Florida, Nebraska and Ontario will be participating. Competition gets underway tomorrow.

Varsity coach Chick Leonard feels very good about his team's chances at the Vail. His goal for the varsity is "to make the finals and to try and get a medal."

He cited the teams to beat as Coast Guard (last year's varsity eight champs), St. Josephs, Florida Institute of Technology, Williams, Trinity, and Ithica. These are the teams who will probably be seeded very high.

The boating for the varsity eight is as follows: stroke Steve Frackleton, Dave Caruso in seven seat, Steve Westra in six, Mark Brown in five, Gary "Fang" Murtaugh in four, Jim Clair in three, Dave Kumlin in two, Rick Edwards in the bow, and John Cusick is the coxswain.

The JV eight consists of stroke Bob Hanson, Pat Bronder in seven seat, Frank Miconi in six, Scott Finch in five, Karl Liebich in four, Tom Lovely in three, Dave Rubin in two, and Bill Carrington in the bow, and the coxswain Joe Campo.

Freshman coach Steve Loomer is excited about his team. His goals for the freshman eight and four is "to make the finals. We have the potential and capability of getting a medal." The frosh eight consists of stroke Jack Frackleton, Jeff Aghjayan in seven, Peter Ventre in six, Lee Howlett in five, John Schleer in four, Paul Ordway in three, George Psychogoes in two and Ron "Crusher" Reece in the bow. Barry Wilkinson is the coxswain.

The varsity and freshman fours have only rowed for a week. Before that they were an eight. The freshman four consists of stroke John Wolfe, Jim Egan in three seat, John O'Connor in two and Tommy Colleary in the bow. Andy Blume is the coxswain.

The varsity four has its work cut out. According to Loomer,, UMass is "up against more difficult competition because we have three freshmen in the boat and we will be racing more experienced people. Our goal here is also to make the finals. With a good race, we can reach that goal."

The varsity four is made up of stroke Bruce Belliveau, Three man Andy Goldstein, two man John Folan, and bow man Jack Quirk. Demon Hobson is the coxswain.

Stickwomen final vs. Plymouth

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

It would be so easy for the women's lacrosse team to go into its final regular season game against Plymouth State and take it easy. After all, it just returned home with the New England Championship from Bridgewater beating Yale 5-4 in the finals, assuring it a birth in the Nationals late in May.

But that is not the attitude of Coach Frank Garahan as he looks to the Plymouth game. "We're going in there with the attitude that we're going to win, and we're going to go all out to do so."

Plymouth State was one of the 16 teams which participated in the recent New England Championships. It was undefeated going into the tourney and won its first game over Northeastern, before losing to finalist Yale, 12-1.

Granted, if UMass plays the way it did in the championships, the outcome should be in its favor as Garahan said that each player on the team played her best sometime during the two days. UMass outscored its four opponents 48-16.

Only in the game against Yale did the offense fail to score 12 goals or more. Yet Garahan was pleased with the five goals that the team did score. Yale featured a zone defense which cuts down opponent's goals and also its own as offensive players hang back from attacking. New Hampshire, which was undefeated in three years, was upset by Yale, scoring only two goals.

"We attacked their zone with our fast break and it worked," said Garahan. "We challenged them individually which is something they weren't used to."

"In Judy Kennedy's overtime goal, we beat the zone. Deb (Hartley) had the ball and forced her player to commit herself, when she passed it to Kennedy who stickhandled her way in and let off a high shot which scored.

Plymouth does not have a zone defense, so scoring should be no problem, as Hartley (11 goals, 8 assists), Jean Hackett (9 goals, 7 assists) Kennedy (6 goals, 4 assists) and Sue Kibling (9 goals, 5 assists) all scored in every game of the tournament.

The defense rebounded from letting up nine goals against Springfield last week to play the best they have all season. Twice UMass opponents were held scoreless in the second half.

The Plymouth game will also be the last chance for the team to go through a season undefeated.

Life and death struggles for IM titles

By JIM GOMES
Collegian Staff

Intramural competition was originated to give the would-be varsity performer the chance to take a fun-loving shot in sports, but last night's softball championships were life and death struggles as four champions were crowned in men's, women's, co-rec, and grad-fac competition.

The underdog Home Plate team surprised most experts by defeating the International Club 8-6, in a fierce 5 inning struggle in the men's championship.

The Sows defeated the Melville Toenails 16-15 to take the women's title while Vandies Dandies won the grad-fac division by downing Education 6-1. Exercise Science became the co-rec champs with a 12-6 victory over the Brownies.

After a scoreless first inning, Home Plate scored the initial three runs of the contest. Tom Seckler (3 for 3 in the game) drove in the first run with a line single to center. Mike McKeever brought Seckler home with a double and he scored on a single by shortstop John Sheran.

John Romboli laced a drive over the left fielder's head to bring the International Club within two runs, 3-1, at the end of two innings.

Home Plate won the game in the top of the third inning scoring four runs on four hits. With one out and centerfielder Rick Flynn on first base after a force out, Dennis Bak lined a double to center scoring Flynn from first base. Mike burrato singled home Bak from third base. Seckelr drove the ball to deep left centerfield that eluded the converging outfielders for a two-run homer giving Home Plate a 7-1 lead.

International Club, comprised of members of the UMass varsity football team, came back for two runs in the bottom half of the inning on a two-run single by Dan Clerico. The Internationals were hitting the ball long and with power, but Home Plate's outfielders were perfectly placed to haul in the line drives.

The Internationals shut out Home Plate in the top of the fourth inning setting the stage for a comeback. Back to back singles by John Willis and Phil Croasdale put the Internationals in striking position with no outs. Todd Holt's sacrifice fly plated Willis and Eddie Lane's single scored Croasdale with Internationals fifth run. Pitcher Ray Pierson reacting to the pressure got Dave Douvajian and his opposing pitcher Mike Fallon to fly out and ground out respectively.

Home Plate added an insurance run in the top of the fifth. Burrato, who reached third base after his lined single was bobbled in left centerfield came home on a single by first baseman Seckler (his third RBI). With the Platers threatening to increase their lead, pitcher Mike Fallon of quarterbacking fame got the next two batters to line out to short and center.

Down by three, 8-5, the Internationals made their final attempt to seize victory from the determined Home Plate club. With one out, Dave Croasdale's home run to left field brought hope to an International Club comeback. First baseman Gerry Greene, lined the ball toward second base where Billy Weiss gathered it in. Bringing up John Romboli, who went for broke stroking the ball deep to leftfield where McKeever gathered in the drive for the final out.

Coach and short fielder Glenn Gagliardi said, "We have been shooting for the title for a long time. Everyone thought we were the underdogs, but we hustled for the victory."

In women's action, the Sows repeated as women's softball champions defeating the Melville Toenails 16-15 in a game which saw both sides take big leads only to watch the other rally.

The Sows scored six runs in the top of the second inning on six hits and two Toenail errors.

The Toenails did not give up as they pushed seven runs across the plate in the bottom half of the inning. Hard throwing Sows' pitcher Kathy Gipps lost a bit of her control walking the first two batters. Kathy Shinnick drove in the first run with an infield single. Cindy Piela's double to left field highlighted a six run barrage as the Toenails took the lead 7-6 after two innings.

The Sows came back to tie the game in the third on a sacrifice fly by first baseman Kelly Salls. Toenails' rightfielder Lisa Lee made a sensational running catch to rob the Sows' Laura O'Neil of an extra base hit to end the Sows' threat.

Sparked by Pat McGrath's triple, the Toenails scored eight runs to forge into what seemed an insurmountable lead.

Gipps socked a lead off home run to left field, but that one run was all the Sows could score in their half of the fourth inning.

The Toenails were unable to increase their lead in the fourth as the Sows' defense tightens up. Gipps got two of the three batters to pop the ball up to the infield.

The Sows did the impossible scoring eight runs in the top of the fifth. Kelly Salls' double brought home Sue Kipling with the winning run to secure the 16-15 victory.

Vandies Dandies defeated Education 6-11 in the graduate-faculty division for their third intramural title of the year. Stu Seigal pitched a one-hitter and Ken Schoen along wjth John Trickett hit home runs to pace the victory.

In the co-rec final, Exercise Science won the title convincingly with a 12-6 win over the Brownies.

Gorillas nip Green; season over

By RUSSELL P. SMITH
Collegian Staff

DARTMOUTH, N.H. — Harry Conforti's twenty-five foot shot on a pass from Eddie Murray at the 2:36 mark of sudden death overtime handed Garber's Gorillas a well-deserved 11-10 victory over the upset-minded Big Green of Dartmouth.

The Gorillas had patiently worked for a good shot following their first possession in the extra session, and it paid off.

'THE SHOT' capped off the season for the Gorillas in climatic fashion as the Gorillas raced onto the field to congratulate the junior midfielder — the hero of the hour.

UMass played hard for four quarters, especially the defensive midfielding corps of Tommy Keenan, Dougie Brown, and Billy Coke. Not to say the rest of the defense didn't play decent — or the offense either for that matter. Maybe I should just say the team as a whole played super.

Then why did the game go into overtime? Dartmouth wouldn't die. At times, when it looked like UMass would put the game away, the Big Green would get a break — occasionally with the referees' help — and climb back into the game.

UMass never fell behind in the contest, and held leads of 3-0 (early), 6-2 (midway through the second period), a three goal lead of 10-7 with just over five minutes remaining in the contest. But Dartmouth worked its way back to the regulation tie.

Dartmouth attackman Bob Battle cut around the UMass crease controlling the ball. As he attempted to cut in front, UMass goalie Don Goldstein attempted to check him off the ball. But Battle got the shot off, flipping the ball into the vacant net. His goal cut UMass' lead to 10-8 with still four minutes left in regulation.

As time ran out, UMass fought even harder defensively to hold off the Big Green-men. Norm Smith nailed Dartmouth's Chris Bensley — and then Conforti hit Ivy-er John Carney; the Dartmouth players were in the process of getting off good shots. The Smith Bensley confrontation resembled that of a freight train running into an oncoming diesel engine.

Dartmouth lucked out when the ball slipped out of Goldstein's stick following a save, and slipped across the goal line. The goal, credited to Dartmouth's Jeff Hickey, put the Green machine down 10-9 with 1:42 remaining. Goldstein made a tough save (1:18 left) on a shot headed into the upper strings, as the hometowners attempted to knot the score.

They did just that with :15 showing on the clock as Don McNaughton scored from a cluster of players in close. But Conforti's overtime score saved the day.

The game itself saw some good end to end action. UMass' Dave Martin had a shot stop milliliters short of the goal line (though it appeared to be over the line). The ref signaled no goal as Dartmouth raced up field and tied the score at 6-6. Then, on the ensuing faceoff Dartmouth's Battle couldn't connect on a shot three feet in front of the UMass net. Mike Lettera scooped up the loose ball lying dangerously in front and started a play which led to a Brooks Sweet goal (off the rebound of a Pit Martin shot) which at the time put UMass up 7-6.

Let is suffice to say this: UMass played hard — they deserved to win. Good passing, super defense, and an all around team effort accomplished the victory.

A loss would have been a rough way to finish up the season.

The team got the win — because they earned it. Period!!!

End of story.

UM softball goes south against SConn in Easterns

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team begins its quest of the Easterns this morning when the nine face Southern Connecticut at Stanford. "I look again for a very close game against Southern," said Diane Thompson, the Minutewomen's mentor.

The Minutewoman lost a squeaker to Southern, 5-4, earlier in the season. However, pitching ace Sue Peters, who compiled a 6-0 record with a ERA of 1.70, is slated to start this time.

The key to UMass' winning, Thompson said, was scoring quickly so her club could keep its confidence which has been on the rise. Victories over Vermont this weekend were a great boost, she added.

Another essential ingredient is hitting. Peters leads this department as well with a .466 average. Following with .400 is Rhonda McManus and Kathy Horrigan at .362. Senior Pat Oski is batting at a .265 clip.

Co-captain Cheryl Meliones said she feels her hitting has peaked at the right time. The catcher knocked in 10 runs, four of which came from a grand slam last weekend.

Meliones added, "I feel the team will skill-wise put it all together."

The Minutewomen will get tested early. If they win the opener they'll play the winner of the Springfield and University of Bridgeport contest later today.

Kathy O'Connell, with an ERA of 2.40 on the season, is expected to hurl the second game. The Minutewomen could possibly play seven games if they fall into the losers bracket. Other available pitchers are Trish O'Connor, 4-2 with a 3.3 ERA, who threw mainly in relief this season. Beth O'Connell and Gail Carter, prompted from the junior varisty, are also ready.

The defense is another factor of UMass' favor. The fielding has been respectable most of the season. Notable players are Carol Bruce in centerfield and Pat Oski in right.

If the Minutewomen continue winning in the double elimination tournament, they'll play Saturday to decide the winner of the division. Afterwards the lone victor travels to Allentown, Pennslyvania to determine the Eastern Regional Champions.

Working-out the summer

Good morning! Thought I'd start off the morning in true Ernie Roberts style by telling you what I had for breakfast, which was Q-Man Daly's favorite: waffles dripping in syrup at Worcester D.C. Speaking of the Worcester dining common, I can't end the semester without a tip of the cap to "Lucy", one of the friendliest ticket tearers you will find in any cafeteria. Let's face it, a smiling face does wonders when one is engulfed in all those academic concerns....

So what are you doing this summer? I was wondering what some of our local athletes were planning on doing this summer and came up with the following: Basketball's Len Kohlhaas will be at home in New Hampshire and plans on attending a basketball camp at Phillips-Exeter Academy. Teammate Bill Morrison will be attending summer school at UMass and hopes to secure a summer job at Boyden. He will also attend a hoop camp.

On the diamond, Minuteman catcher Dave Oleksak will be working at his father's business, the B&D Pallet Co., while playing ball for the Chicopee Tigers in the nearby Tri-Country League. George Kelley, also on the UMass team, will join Oleksak on the Chicopee nine. Chris and Jane Carson, two sisters who play for the women's tennis team, will be hoping to enter various summer tourneys and will probably work for the Cambridge Redevelopment Authority. Mary Hallaren, of women's hoop fame, will be employed at Ziggy's, a fast-food and ice-cream shop in Plymouth, and may attend a basketball camp.

On the gridiron, sophomore Steve LeMay, of Grafton, will be a lifeguard and will play summer league basketball and lift weights to stay in shape.

The worldly renowned July Van Handle, former Collegian sports editor, has secured a summer internship with the Boston Globe and in a few weeks will be running for Peter Gammons' between inning coffee....

Four ad-free pages a week in The Collegian for you if you can answer this trivia question: We all know that Bob Pickett is the new UMass football coach, and we also know that the man he replaced is Cleveland bound Dick MacPherson, but who was coach before Mac? Answer below.

.... Rumors abound that football player Ross Schubarth has signed a contract with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League. "I know that he has been talking with people up there," said coach Pickett yesterday, "and although I have not heard anything that does not mean he hasn't signed." Schubarth was not available for comment.....

On the Jim Rice exploding baseball situation, I can only say that I hope my children are gifted with his poor eyesight. Poor Jim, he's still not satisfied with his swing. When he is satisfied, I won't sit in the Fenway bleachers without a goalie mask....

Trivia answer: None other than Vic Fusia, who is now Director of Sports Development down at Boyden.

Upset Department: New Intramural softball champs are Home Plate, with an upset 8-6 win over the International Club. See Jim Gomes' recap inside.

Oh well, I have to meet my roommate at the Bluewall, and there is still homework to be done.

Goodbye, UMass. It's been a pleasure.....

Protesters to leave office today

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

Protesters barricaded inside the Collegian offices for 11 days, demanding improvements in the space and placement of women's news in the paper, will leave the offices at noon today after a compromise agreement yesterday was reached between the Collegian and the protesters.

A fact-finding Chancellor's Commission on Women's News in the Collegian was established under the agreement to work through the summer to present its findings and proposals to the chancellor and the University community by September 1.

The commission's recommendations will not be binding to either side. The agreement also states "both sides will have the opportunity to study and to respond to these recommendations," and that "if there is a majority and a minority report, both sides will be responded to."

Voting members of the commission are: two student representatives from the Collegian, two student representatives from the women's occupation community, and three faculty members. The faculty members must be chosen with the agreement of both sides.

The commission will also have three non-voting members: University Ombudsman Robert Wellman; a member of the chancellor's staff; and the associate provost for affirmative action.

The agreement was signed yesterday between 2 and 3 p.m. by Julie E. Melrose, women's editor of the Collegian and leader of the protest signing for the protesters, William A. Sundstrom, editor-in-chief of the Collegian signing for the Collegian, and Robert L. Woodbury, vice chancellor for student affairs, signing for Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. Bromery is currently out of the state.

"I'm very happy to be back in our office," said Sundstrom, "It's been a very trying time for the paper, and for all those individuals involved."

Sundstrom said he "felt good" about the agreement. "I have some minor fears about it," he said, "like the precedent it sets in letting other groups like the faculty and the administration make recommendations about Collegian policy. On the other hand, it's a special issue that requires some reason and seeing through."

I feel good about the agreement.

—Bill Sundstrom, Collegian editor-in-chief

It looks pretty good. We're optimistic.

—Chris Decker, protester

Chris Decker, a member of the Chancellor's Commission representing the women's occupation community, said the agreement "looks pretty good. We're optimistic."

Melrose said the protesters wanted to stay in the office until today because they "need time or organize press and security and do an analysis of what we've done here."

She said the protesters also wanted to "clean up. We haven't done any damage, but we have been living here."

Negotiations between representatives of the protesters and the Collegian reached an impasse last week. The women's negotiators were advocating five pages per week with no more than one-fourth of each page filled with advertising. Collegian negotiators maintained that economically and philosophically, the newspaper did not want to establish women's pages, according to Mary L. Brown, a member of the Collegian's negotiating team.

The occupation of the Collegian offices began May 1 at 3:30 a.m., when a group of about 40 people, who had been peacefully sitting in the office since Sunday afternoon, barricaded the doors with wire, rope, chains, and office furniture.

No Collegian staff member has been allowed into the office since the protesters barricaded the doors, although the ombudsman was allowed in to remove materials for the Sporting Goods Coop and Index, yearbook whose offices were also barricaded as part of the protest.

The Collegian published from various locations over the 11 days.

Food was sent into the barricaded office by the women's supporters, and many of them went in and out of the office during the occupation. The protesters also had a security system set up inside the office.

On April 13, the Collegian Board of Editors voted down a motion to include four ad-free pages of women's news each week in the paper at a meeting attended by 75 protesters. The board reversed its decision after the Undergraduate Student Senate, meeting in an adjacent room voted to freeze the Collegian's funds and repossess their equipment if the board did not endorse the women's demands. The Collegian receives 15 percent of its funding and most of its equipment from the student senate.

Collegian staff members overturned the board's decision a week later by a vote of 98-28 at a meeting attended by about 125 protesters.

The staff also directed the board to come up with a reasonable compromise, and negotiating teams representing both sides were set up a week after the staff's vote.

After negotiations broke down, the Collegian instituted a policy that devotes 40 column inches, approximately three-quarters of a page, to news concerning women. This news appears anywhere in

Contract negotiations may resume Tuesday

Contract negotiations are expected to resume Tuesday between the faculty union and the UMass administration, according to Massachusetts Society of Professors President James E. Cathey.

"It looks favorable that we'll start negotiating again," Cathey said yesterday. He said the chief negotiators from both sides will meet soon to arrange final details for the resumption of the contract talks.

No administration officials could be reached for comment.

The contract talks broke off April 24 after administration bargainers left a negotiating session. Each side later accuses the other of breaking off the talks.

Cathey said yesterday an executive board meeting of the MSP scheduled for Tuesday has been postponed until Friday. The board was scheduled to discuss withholding student grades from the administration.

The MSP this week authorized the board to proceed as it "sees fit" on a final decision to withhold grades. Cathey said the board is still weighing that option while at the same time will be assessing progress in the new negotiations.

Girl Scout killer sought

Mysteries plague murder case

McALESTER, OKLA. [Pacific News Service] — In a small Death Row cell deep inside the Oklahoma State Penitentiary here, a 34-year-old Cherokee Indian sits in total silence, staring at the white-washed walls and bars that surround him.

His name is Gene Leroy Hart and he is accused of murdering three tiny Girl Scouts who were dragged from their tents, sexually molested and repeatedly beaten and slashed during a spring campout nearly a year ago.

But Hart's case involves more than murder.

It is also the story of a bizarre investigation involving murder clues hidden in secret caves, vanishing fingerprints, volunteer posses of cowboys in pickup trucks, and a man-hunt by jungle-trained Vietnam veterans called "Spooks".

> 'I thought once we caught Hart our troubles were over, but the damn thing just keeps getting worse.'
> —Sheriff Glen Weaver

It is a story of how a friendly Oklahoma town called Locust Grove changed overnight into a hamlet haunted by fear, where strangers no longer were welcome, where doors that never were locked now are bolted, and where loaded guns are kept neaby.

And it is a tale of people divided, brother against brother, friend against friend, white man against Indian, as Oklahomans choose sides to argue: "Is Hart the killer?"

Next month, Hart is scheduled for trial. American Indian Movement leaders say they will protest. An unknown vigilante has promised to kill Hart. And whenever Hart is brought from his cell, crowds of up to 300 gather. Some people jeer, others cheer, most just push and shove for a glimpse.

And when the trial finally begins, more will be at stake than Hart's future.

Mayes County Attorney Sidney Wise, who was unknown across the state before the murders, is now a candidate for state attorney general. His staff openly admits that a guilty verdict will insure him easy victory. An acquittal could leave him unemployed.

The current attorney general is campaigning for governor this year and the governor is running for the U.S. Senate. They too are expected to get involved in the highly publicized prosecution.

"I thought once we caught Hart our troubles were over," said Mayes County Sheriff Glen "Pete" Weaver, "but the damn thing just keeps getting worse."

Even the reputation of the state crime bureau is at stake because of the unusual way the case was handled.

The bodies of Michelle Guse, age 9; Lori Lee Farmer, 8; and Doris Denise Milner, 10, all of the Tulsa area, were discovered by a camp counselor at dawn June 13 outside their tent at Camp Scott about a mile from Locust Grove, a northeastern Oklahoma town of about 1,000.

They had been attacked the first night of a two-week campout. Their tent was the only one without an adult counselor in it. Two of the girls were beaten to death. The third was strangled.

Officials announced they had two good clues — a footprint and a full set of "picture perfect" fingerprints found on one of the dead girl's thighs.

The next day, Wise was furious because the media had printed stories about the footprint. "The murderer has sure gotten rid of those shoes now," he yelled. The incident marked the beginning of a bitter feud that ended with Wise calling for a news blackout and refusing to tell the press anything.

Three days after the slayings, Wise had two specially trained tracking dogs flown in from Pennsylvania. Within a week, one of them had died of heat prostration and the other was struck by an automobile.

Investigators gave one neighbor of the camp a lie detector test after new tracking dogs led searchers to his cabin. A newspaper ran the caption "Slayer?" under his photograph by mistake. The man suffered a stroke.

Fresh tracking dogs led investigators to a small cave about a mile from the murder site. Inside, officials found empty food cans and pieces of two photographs of three women.

The photographs were distributed to newspapers which printed them on the front pages with the caption, "Who are these people?"

Within 24 hours, the women in the photographs had been identified as guests at a 1969 wedding of a prison employee's daughter.

Investigators said Hart, who was in prison at the time, had worked as a darkroom assistant and had attended the wedding.

Hart was serving a 10-year sentence for the kidnap and rape of a pregnant woman when the wedding was held. He was paroled later that year, but within months was arrested on burglary charges and returned to prison.

While awaiting a court hearing in 1973 on another matter, Hart escaped from Sheriff Weaver's jail — the only prisoner ever to do so. He had been missing for nearly four years when the girls were murdered, but Weaver was confident that he was in the same area as the camp.

Hart's mother lived less than a mile from the camp and Weaver claimed various informants had told him several times Hart was in Locust Grove.

"Every time we went up to get him, he was gone," Weaver explained. "Hell, he's related to half them folks up there."

Wise charged Hart with three counts of murder, each punishable by death. There was just one problem, investigators said Hart's fingerprints did not match the ones found on the body.

> Despite massive news coverage, County Attorney Sidney Wise and his staff are confident Hart can get a fair trial.

A few minutes after the charges were filed, Sheriff Weaver jumped into his car and raced from the camp. A farmer had seen a man matching Hart's description hiding in a cave.

It was getting dark so Weaver called for volunteers to encircle a one mile area. More than 200 lawmen and 400 farmers, teenagers, and businessmen responded. Many of them had heard about the posse on their citizens' band radios. Some came armed, some came drunk, a few were arrested for possessing marijuana.

As Weaver and the lawmen — some of them wearing bullet proof vests and carrying automatic weapons — moved slowly through the dense brush, the 400 volunteers used their cars and trucks to form a circle.

They turned on their vehicles' headlights to make sure no one could slip past the chain of cars and trucks.

"He could be hiding in the trees," Weaver warned, "be careful".

By daybreak, most of the volunteers had abandoned the project and the only things lawmen had found were ticks, chiggers and snakes.

A helicopter with a heat sensing device also failed to find anything.

Weaver decided to try an older approach at catching fugitives. He offered a $5,000 reward for Hart.

Little happened until July 30th when some tracking dogs stumbled upon a small cave near the slaying site. Written on one wall in black ink was the taunting message, "The killer was here. Bye Bye Fools, 77-6-17."

Weaver immediately said it was a message from Hart. "He's just signing his work — those murders — like a painter signs art."

But others doubted the killer would be hiding in the woods with a felt-tip pen.

The cave provided few additional clues, but it did suggest the slayer still might be in the Locust Grove area and bounty hunters quickly moved in.

A group of Vietnam veterans called "Spooks" bragged they would capture Hart within 24 hours by setting up ambush points. American Indian Movement leaders were horrified and called Weaver's investigation "a circus".

Hart's mother, Ella Mae Buckskin, asked for AIM protection because she said she was being followed constantly and harassed. When police asked the 51-year-old woman why she was buying chewing tobacco one day, she stuck a wad of it in her mouth and spit it a them. "'Cause I chew it, that's why," she said, "it ain't for Gene.".

Mrs. Buckskin told reporters she had undergone a vision and seen her son in Canada. But Hart was not out of the state, lawmen soon discovered. He was less than 50 miles away, hiding with an Indian medicine man in a broken-down wooden shack.

A group of shotgun-armed agents stormed the shack, breaking down its doors, capturing Hart alone, unarmed. They had been tipped off by an informant who collected the reward.

Despite massive news coverage, including one story which called Hart "the killer", Wise and his staff are confident Hart can get a fair trial in Mayes County.

"He killed them here and we're going to convict him here," says assistant prosecutor Hobbs Royce. "It's as simple as that."

Hart's attorneys refuse all comment.

And the questions linger unanswered.

State crime bureau agents now say there never were any fingerprints on the dead girl's body. That was misinformation, they say, a mistake. Hart's attorneys have filed a court petition demanding a thorough investigation.

And why would a man be carrying two photographs with him eight years after a wedding if he was hiding in a cave?

There is another mystery officials do not like to discuss.

More than a month before the murders someone had broken another girls' tent, opened a bag of doughnuts, eaten some and left the bag at the entrance, with a note beneath. It said three girls would be killed in one of the tents soon. A counselor destroyed the note, thinking it was a prank

Student group forms to improve security

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

A student group intending to improve campus security is "in the planning stages," according to UMass sophomre Mark L. Mendel.

The Students on Security (SOS) Project would entail night patrolling of residential areas, concentrating on weekends, and would provide a service for accompanying students to and from late classes or the library, according to Mendel, a project organizer. He said he hopes to start the service in the fall.

Mendel said he decided to initiate the project as a result of reading several articles and reports within recent weeks of rape and other campus crimes. "There is a great feeling of fear on campus," he said.

The group would also reorganize and supervise the present dorm security system to "make it more efficient," according to Mendel. In addition a system of anonymous reporting of crimes would be set up whereby better security could be provided for crime areas. "We will work closely with residential area coordinators in cooperation with the UMass Department of Public Safety," said Mendel.

About 10 students, mostly residents of Van Meter North dormitory in the Central area, have signed up to participate in the project. The group, which this week is in the process of becoming a Recognized Student Organization, is looking for 75 to 100 students from the University community in addition to students now on dorm security for voluntary as well as paid positions in the program.

"Funding for the project may come from the area governments and the student senate," said Mendel. "We're looking into other sources as well."

Anyone interested in participating in the SOS Project may contact Mendel in 249 Van Meter North.

Court denies mall injunction

A Suffolk Superior Court judge yesterday denied a Hadley group's request for a preliminary injunction to suspend construction of the Pyramid Companies' $5 million Hampshire Mall.

The request, however, can be filed again according to Atty. David Kaplan, an associate of Atty. Thomas Lesser. Lesser made the request on behalf of the Citizens for the Preservation of Hadley.

Yesterday's decision can also be appealed to the Supreme Judicial Court, Kaplan said.

The citizens' group is claiming Pyramid did not wait a required 20 days for a building permit it was granted to mature.

The judge apparently denied the request on the basis of an affidavit submitted by the Hadley town clerk, according to Kaplan. It said even though the permit was not filed until April 24, the Planning Board made its decision to grant the permit April 11.

The group will appeal the planning board's decision in Hampshire County Court next week, Kaplan said.

State senate to hear budget next week

BOSTON [AP] — State senators next week will grapple with the House-approved, record high $5 billion budget, described as being hundreds of millions of dollars out of balance.

The budget, which includes one tax cut and amendments that added nearly $700 million, was given final approval by the House Thursday morning after four days of debate that ended in a 20-hour session.

The spending measure for the fiscal year beginning July 1 will be taken up by the Senate Ways and Means Committee next week.

It then will go to the full Senate for debate and eventually to a conference committee of members both branches to resolve differences.

The House approved the budget on a 136-75 roll call vote and defeated a move to reconsider the action.

The budget is "totally out of balance" — $600 million to $700 million on more than anticipated revenues — and will need to be "substantially readjusted" said Rep. John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

The tax cut, worth $23 million, was a reduction in the meals tax from six cents to five cents on the dollar. College students living on campuses were exempted from the tax.

The budget includes Massachusetts Fair Share's "circuit breaker" aimed at giving $130 million in real estate tax relief through state rebates of up to $500 to most households when local real estate taxes or rents go over a fixed percentage of total income. Fair Share is a consumer advocacy group.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis came close but lost the big budget battle over the proposed new school aid formula. The decisive vote was 114-111 against the proposal guaranteeing an additional $150 million in school aid during the coming year.

Each city and town would have received at least 15 percent more in school aid than they got last year through a formula aimed at equalizing educational opportunities.

Some of the governor' aides said the Senate may adopt the plan.

Added during the last hour of debate was nearly $10.5 million in additional aid to cities and towns with "disproportionate numbers" of school pupils.

Introduced by Rep. James J. Gaffney III, I-Tewksbury, the amendment listed all 351 cities and towns with amounts they would get. Distribution would be through the lottery or school aid formula, whichever would give more to the community.

A move to force state agencies to buy all beverages in returnable containers lost as did a proposal to place permanent lottery employees under civil service and hire temporary workers through a lottery based on date of birth.

The House approved a provision allowing the state auditor to check all its financial activities at least every two years, and a requirement that the state comptroller pre-audit all state Welfare Department payments.

'No-confidence' poll canned by sponsor

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A philosophy professor who intended to circulate petitions around campus expressing "no-confidence" in Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday said he no longer intends to do so.

Robert P. Wolff said he decided to "deep six" the idea after he thought more about it.

"Since there is adequate faculty representation on the Presidential Search Committee, it would not be a good idea to do anything pressuring the committee," he said.

Bromery is one of five final candidates for the UMass presidency. Former President Robert C. Wood stepped down January 1. Interim President Franklin K. Patterson has served since then.

The UMass Board of Trustees may pick a new president Monday when it meets in Boston.

"I thought since I'm on sabbatical, I'll say the hell with it and go back to what I was doing," Wolff said.

Wolff decided to circulate the petition last Friday after he tried to introduce a similar motion into the annual meeting of the Faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The motion could not be introduced because of parliamentary rules, but the 100 faculty present informally agreed with the motion.

Bromery at the time said the action was the group's "constitutional right," and called it a "union vote."

Faculty Senate waits for prioritization of proposals

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Any new academic program proposals will be suspended in the Faculty Senate until a new committee establishes priority categories for them.

This provision was included in the mandate the senate approved yesterday for the ad hoc Advisory Committee on Academic Priorities, established two weeks ago.

The committee should have its categories established sometime next semester.

The committee is designed to take proposals after they have been examined by other Faculty Senate committees and prioritize them as the last step before they are forwarded to the administration.

One program now in limbo is the proposal for a women's studies program. Rules Committee chairman David W. Yaukey said at yesterday's meeting that a letter is being drafted to respond to President Franklin K.. Patterson's request for more information on the proposal.

In other business, the senate elected political science professor Harvey Kline secretary, 24-23. Kline's only opponent was Paul Jennings, professor of plant and soil sciences.

Kline succeeds Terence Burke, who said he is stepping down to allow for a "healthy turnover" in that position. The secretary serves a two-year term.

Also, former Student Government Association President Jon A. Hite introduced newly elected President Donald Bishop.

Hite said that on behalf of the Class of '78 he would like to thank the faculty for a "tremendous" education.

The senate is now seeking nominations for a presiding officer and a delegate to the Board of Trustees. Both positions will be voted on at the last scheduled meeting of the semester, May 25.

The senate has scheduled a special meeting for next Thursday.

Italian bank manager wounded

ROME [AP] – Terrorists struck at an American multinational target Thursday, wounding the Italian manager of the Chemical Bank of New York in a street ambush in Milan.

Meanwhile, the government's parliamentary allies demanded stronger police measures to deal with the violence climaxed by the murder of Aldo Moro.

In the sixth "kneecapping" attack in six days, a man and a woman fired three bullets into the legs and one into the groin of Marzio Astarita, 37, manager of the Milan and Rome offices of the bank.

In the capital, sources said foreign governments were told they could send three-member delegations to Saturday's state memorial service for Moro, the former premier slain by his Red Brigades kidnappers. But the sources said the Italian government was worried about security if top foreign officials came.

Also mindful of security, two of the five parties supporting the government called for a meeting to discuss stronger anti-terror measures in the light of the failure of the massive police hunt to find Moro's abductors and prevent his death.

Police in Milan, the north's largest city, said Astarita was leaving home for work when he was shot. Leg shootings are a favorite tactic of the Brigades and other leftist extremists to show their power to strike at the establishment whenever they choose.

Various Communist splinter organizations claimed responsibility for the attack.

One message taking responsibility said elements of the ruling class against which a "decisive" confrontation was to be waged included "the International Monetary Fund, the multinational American holdings, American banks, the Bank of Italy, credit institutions, Confindustria the association of private Italian industrialists."

Sections of the message were identical to one issued after the leg shooting Wednesday, also in Milan, of an executive of the state-run Montedison chemical company. Four persons have been kneecapped there in five days – seven persons this year.

Police in Turin said they had discovered a Red Brigades hideout that appeared from seized documents to have been the local headquarters of the feared urban guerrilla gang.

But there appeared to be no progress in finding the assassins of Moro, whose bullet-riddled body was buried in private ceremonies Wednesday in a cemetery at the village of Torrita Tiberina, 30 miles north of Rome.

BU's Silber would okay admissions wealth test

WASHINGTON [AP] – Boston University President John Silber says he is not opposed philosophically to admitting one applicant instead of another because of family wealth, if both are equally qualified. But he said his university does not do it.

Silber said in an interview here that he is sometimes contacted by persons seeking to buy an admission to BU for a son or daughter. The university president said he responds by saying, "Forget it."

"Philosophically... I don't think there's anything wrong, when two people are equally qualified, in choosing one who can help the institution over another one," Silber said of rich and poor applicants. "In practice, that is not done," he said.

A student newspaper, The BU Exposure, published an article in March that quoted from transcripts of a 1973 BU Board of Trustees' meeting at which Silber said:

"There have been any number of people crawling all over me for admission to our medical school and our law school who have never been tapped systematically for a gift to this university. I'm not ashamed to sell those indulgences."

Silber said the Exposure story was "a hoax' and "a frame-up" by "naughty boys and girls."Silber characterized his remarks as a joke, "a slip remark."

"You can't explain a joke to people who don't get a joke," he said in the interview. "Everybody present at that meeting knew it was a joke."

Silber said the October 1973 trustees' meeting was tape recorded, but now the tape is missing. "I'm sure we'll never find it," Silber said.

Following publication of The Exposure story, and quotation from it by The Associated Press, the University sent what it estimates to be some 1,000 letters to newspapers, declaring that "admission to Boston University is not for sale."

The letters, over Silber's signature, said The Exposure had lifted "widely separated points in the transcript" and "joking asides," then juxtaposed them for a story that the letter claimed was aiming to embarrass the school.

Kelly to answer charges

BOSTON [AP] – Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, will have to keep his date Friday with a legislative investigating committee, a state Supreme Court judge has ruled.

In issuing his ruling Thursday, Justice Benjamin Kaplan affirmed the right of a legislative committee to subpoena a member of the legislature.

Kelly's lawyer, George A. McLaughlin Jr., contended that the committee had no such right as long as the legislature is in session.

The Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee investigating the McKee-Berger-Mansueto scandal subpoenaed Kelly to appear at 10 a.m. Friday.

The panel wants to question Kelly about a $1,000 payment MBM officials claim they made to him. They also plan to ask Kelly about checks he allegedly solicited from MBM for Senate President Kevin B. Harrington and Boston Mayor Kevin H. White.

Kelly may be also asked about conversations with MBM officials at which he allegedly demanded $100,000 to quash a legislative investigation of the firm's work on the University of Massachusetts' Boston campus.

Kelly was named an unindicted co-conspirator at the trial of ex-senators Joseph DiCarlo and Ronald MacKenzie, who were convicted of extorting $40,000 from the consulting firm.

Kelly's lawyer negotiated for several weeks with the Post Audit committee over the terms of Kelly's appearance. After rejecting Kelly's requirement that all questions be submitted in writing in advance, the committee voted to subpoena the senator.

As to Kelly's argument that no legislative committee can subpoena a fellow legislator while the legislature is in session Justice Kaplan said, "No case supports this proposition. Much authority is to the contrary."

MBM laundered money to others—Rep. Cohen

BOSTON [AP] – As much as $100,000 laundered through various accounts may have been paid out to "beneficiaries" of the New York consulting firm McKee-Berger-Mansueto, the head of a legislative investigating committee charged Thursday.

"If you add up all the numbers...over $100,000 has gone out from this company to beneficiaries of this company without any accounting for it," Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, chairman of the Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee said.

The subcommittee has been probing MBM's relationship to various state officials for several months. The firm had a $6 million to supervise the construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus.

"This is still piecemeal as far as we're concerned," Cohen said. "If this investigation lasted another four or five years, we might not find out what happened to it all."

Cohen made the comment as the subcommittee heard from former MBM bookkeeper Sylvester Novelline of Chelsea.

Novelline worked for the firm's Boston office for nearly three years, starting in July 1970.

Novelline testified that he endorsed and cashed a number of MBM checks, which company officials say eventually ended up in the pockets of Massachusetts officials. But, he said, he never knew where the checks ended up.

"I always felt uneasy about cashing the checks because I never knew what the hell happened to the money," Novelline said.

He identified his signature on checks made out to cash on Jan. 26, 1972. One for $2,000 allegedly went to Frederick Kussman, an employee of the state Bureau of Building and Construction, and a $1,000 check that MBM officials say was to go to Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford.

Novelline testified during the extortion trial of ex-Sens. Joseph J.C. DiCarlo, D-Revere, and Ronald C. MacKenzie, R-Burlington, about two $5,000 checks he cashed for MBM Vice President Jack Thomas. The two men are each serving a one-year federal prison term for extorting $40,000 from MBM.

He said when he cashed the first of the $5,000 checks he asked what account it was to be charged to and was told "not to worry" about it.

Novelline said he had never heard of either American Science and Engineering Co. or Associated Business Consultants Limited of Beirut, Lebanon.

Light plane explodes above Lawrence

LAWRENCE [AP] – A light plane with an least three persons aboard exploded over downtown Lawrence yesterday afternoon, showering sharp, hot wreckage onto a playground where young girls were playing softball. Three bodies were found in the debris.

Witnesses said none of the girls on the softball field was injured. The youngsters, however, fled screaming as the debris from the craft, smoking from the blast, rained down around them.

The wreckage fell on an area some five blocks from the center of Lawrence. Parts of the plane were strewn for blocks.

I just saw the plane explode," said a woman. "It spiralled down. There was a cloud of black smoke."

"Parts of the plane are still on the roof of this building," said Sadie Souma, who was working at a cleaners about a block from the crash. "I went to the window and saw the kids running."

She said the explosion sounded like a "pop."

"The building shook all over," said Dan Cote, a bartender working some 75 yards from the ball field."

The plane, a four-seater Cherokee, had apparently just lifted off from Lawrence Airport.

Univ. negligence may bring rent rebates

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Students may pick up forms for rent rebates of up to $100 "hardship conditions suffered as a result of physical deterioration," according to Vicky Fortini, co-chairperson of a joint student-administrator committee to formulate dormitory rebates and refunds.

According to Fortini, the conditions must result from "University negligence" in order to warrant a rebate.

"Leaky roofs, poor heating, or plumbing malfunctions are examples," said Fortini.

Forms may be picked up from students senators or in the Student Organizing Project office in room 426 of the Student Union building.

Fortini said the committee, which was formed as a result of the student occupation of the Whitmore administration building on April 7 and 8, will review each case and decide whether a rebate is in order.

Fortini said the committee has not set guidelines yet for the amount of money each student could receive.

"I would say it would be $100 or less – to be on the safe side," said Fortini.

But Co-chairperson Robert L. Campbell said he couldn't guess what the figure would be. The committee hasn't set up any parameters."

Fortini said the best example of a legitimate claim would be "a student who had a leaky roof which required constant surveillance by the student to empty the bucket."

The committee is composed of five administrators and five students and is chaired by Fortini, a Student Organizing Project member, and Campbell.

According to Campbell, the committee also made forms available April 27 for refunds on personal property that has been damaged due to faulty maintenance. Campbell said "about seven damage claims have been made."

Fortini said the committee is working out a process to cover all such cases until a dorm lease is worked out between students and the administration.

Rebate forms must be returned to area resource management coordinators as soon as possible so they can be reviewed over the summer. Fortini said claims must be made this semester for problems incurred this past academic year.

Communists want aid in relaxing limits

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Communist fishing fleets want New England fishermen to hlep them get parts of the 200-mile limit relaxed, a spokesman for the Atlantic Offshore Lobster and Fish Association said yesterday.

The Communist fishermen made their plea to American fishermen during a meeting held this week in Philadelphia, according to Alan D. Guimond of Bristol, R.I., the assocation's secretary.

Guimond said the Communist nations complained that the regulations which determine how close foreign vessels can come to American lobster pots are causing them serious problems.

He said the plea for help came as a surprise to the American fishing industry, which, he claimed, has lost thousands of dollars worth of fishing because of foreign trawlers.

Guimond said the American fishermen rejected the Communists' plea and will not support their demands until U.S. fishermen are reimbursed for damage to their vessels allegedly caused by Communist trawlers.

The Soviets claim the restrictions imposed on so-called lobster pot areas are making it difficult for their fleets to harvest the fish that have been allotted to them.

The lobster-pot areas are inside the 200-mile limit, and the foreign vessels are allowed to fish in those locations if there is a surplus of fish in them.

Mountaineering #1.

FUNDAMENTALS OF MOUNTAINEERING

What is mountaineering all about? Funny you should ask. Because we just happen to have an answer. (Ah-h, life's little coincidences.) Mountaineering is a skill, a science and an art. Yet anyone with a thirst for excellence and normally developed motor skills can master it. Simply study these fundamentals and follow them faithfully.

1. Step one, appropriately enough, starts by selecting the correct site. To do so, pick up a bottle of Busch® Premium Beer. This is called heading for the mountains.

2. Okay, here's where the fun begins. Hold the mountain firmly in your left hand, grasp the mountain top with your right hand and twist the little fella off. There you go.

3. Now for the tricky part. Neophytes, listen up: the proper pour is straight down the center of the glass. Only in this way will the cold, invigorating taste of the mountain come to a head.

4. Once poured, pacing becomes paramount. As any seasoned mountaineer will tell you, the only way to down a mountain is slowly, smoothly and steadily – savoring every swallow of the brew that is Busch. If you're a bit awkward at first, don't be discouraged. Perfection takes practice. Soon enough, having emptied your glass and filled your soul, you too will be a mountaineer.

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH Head for the mountains.

Senate group refuses to halt Carter's plan for jet sales

WASHINGTON [AP] — A Senate committee Thursday turned down a resolution aimed at blocking President Carter's Mideast jet fighter sales, giving Carter a victory in the first round of his battle to keep Congress from scuttling the deal.

On an 8-8 vote, the Senate Foreign Relations committee refused to block the $4.8 billion arms sales package, in which the United States would sell jet fighters to Israel and two of its Arab neighbors, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Under parliamentary procedure, Congress may reject an administration's planned arms sale within 30 days of its formal submission to Capitol Hill. But the administration does not need express approval from Congress. To halt such a deal, both the House and Senate must approve resolutions blocking it.

That was the issue before the Senate committee on Thursday. The panel voted instead to send the Senate a report making no recommendation for or against the arms sales. The matter then will come up on the Senate floor early next week, possibly on Monday.

The key vote was the 8-8 tie on the anti-sales resolution. The Senate panel was considered the forum most hostile to the Carter's plan, which involves the sale of 60 F-15s to Saudi Arabia and 50 F-5Es to Egypt as well as 75 F-16s and 15 F-16s for Israel.

Congressional opposition to the Carter plan has centered on the Saudi deal, with opponents saying that Israel's security would be imperiled by the sale of F-15s to Saudi Arabia.

The Senate committee vote came one day after Carter gave assurances he would offer an additional 20 F-15s to Israel for delivery in 1983-84.

A White House aide deeply involved in the lobbying, who asked not to be identified, said he thought the administration had a two-vote margin of support in the House committee.

In an effort to win support for the sales, Carter notified the Senate and House committee that he will offer Israel another 20 F-15s for delivery in the mid 1980s and said the administration would give sympathetic consideration to Israeli requests for more modern warplanes after that date.

Coal strike fuel charges might be overestimated

WASHINGTON [AP] — Emergency electric power that was moved into areas hardest hit by the winter coal strike may have cost consumers $100 million too much in fuel adjustment charges, a federal energy official said yesterday.

William W. Lindsay, director of electric power regulation for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, said utilities may be ordered to refund some of this money.

This will depend on the outcome of a full-scale commission investigation announced Wednesday, into wholesale electric power sales during the 110-day strike, Lindsay told a Senate energy subcommittee.

"The rates were clearly in excess of costs of providing the service," Lindsay testified.

When coal stockpilees dwindled, huge amounts of electricity were transferred to utilities in 10 east-central states from neighboring systems as far away as Kansas and Oklahoma.

"If more than one intervening system were involved, each would add at least 10 percent to whatever price it had to pay for the energy," Lindsay said.

He said these add-on charges got stacked on top of each other and eventually wound up being passed on to electricity users as part of the fuel adjustment charges on their electric bills — even though the charges bore little relation to the actual costs of moving the power.

Such surcharges accounted for roughly $100 million of the $450 million to $500 million spent by utilities in purchasing emergency power during the three months of the strike, Lindsay said.

"And of this $100 million, "very little could be considered actual costs," he added.

"In an emergency situation like this, rates should approximate costs," Lindsay told the energy conservation and regulation subcommittee.

Lindsay said energy supplied last December by the Pennsylvania-New Jersey-Maryland power pool, passing through the Allegheny Power System and the American Electric Power System, to utilities in Ohio, chalked up total additional charges of 43.1 percent.

States where the most power was brought in from other areas included Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Michigan and Tennessee.

Huey Newton arrested on assault charges

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. [AP] — Black Panther Party leader Huey Newton was arrested in a barroom brawl yesterday near this coastal university city where he was living while awaiting trial on a murder charge.

Newton, 36, and two other men were booked for investigation of assault with intent to commit murder following a melee at a bar in nearby Aptos, the Santa Cruz County sheriff's office said. Also booked were Robert Herd, 29, and William Moore, 43, officers said.

All three were held on $25,000 bail. Deputies said at least two shots were fired in the incident about 100 miles south of San Francisco.

A 26-year-old Aptos man, Kenny Hall, was treated and released at a local hospital for a minor head wound, officers said.

Bob Noonan, Santa Cruz County assistant district attorney, said Newton would probably be brought to court today for arraignment.

The slender Newton, a lightning rod of controversy since he co-founded the Black Panther Party in 1966, has been living here for several months and taking postgraduate courses at the University of California at Santa Cruz.

He ended a 2½-year self-imposed exile in Cuba last July to return to the United States to face trial on charges of shooting a 17-year-old Oakland prostitute who died after he fled the country. He also was accused of assault in the pistol-whipping of his tailor in a separate incident.

Newton had been free on $80,000 bail.

Rent negotiable

To the Editor:

We are seniors and would like to comment on the personal effects of the Collegian occupation. We do not wish to address the issue of the women's pages but the issues of our rights as students.

Two weeks prior to the take-over of the Collegian, we ran an ad in the classifieds section in an attempt to sublet our apartment. Both of us will be graduating in a couple of weeks and will be attending graduate school in the fall, and it is absolutely necessary that we sublet. As a result of these ads, we received a number of responses.

However, since the question of women's pages has culminated in the occupation of the newspaper office, our main source of communication with this campus has been cut off. Our ad, which has already been paid for, has not run for the past week and a half and consequently, we have received virtually no calls concerning the apartment.

We know that many others like us have been similarly and unfairly affected by this controversy ... By the way, the rent's negotiable.

Non-violence training

To the Editor:

The Hampshire County Alternative Energy Coalition is pleased to announce that non-violence training sessions are beginning in preparation for the occupation-restoration of the Seabrook nuclear power plant site in New Hampshire.

The occupation, sponsored by the Clamshell Alliance, will begin on June 24th. Non-violence preparation is required for anyone planning to take part in the action, though anyone considering the possibility or just interested in finding out more is encouraged to attend. Sessions last about eight hours, and will be held most every Saturday and Sunday — as well as some week nights — here at UMass and elsewhere in the area.

For information on exact times and places, call:

The AEC office [week days]
85 Main St., Amherst
253-9998

other times, call; 584-8975 or come by the AEC table in the Campus Center on Wednesdays and Thursdays.

Come discuss why thousands of people in New England believe that non-violent civil disobedience is necessary to stop nuclear power.

Faculty-student relationship

To the Editor:

... and particularly to Jay Martus, whose columns I read weekly, usually with enthusiasm. However, I feel he's gone too far with his advocacy journalism in his editorial concerning the problems of the faculty with the administration ["In whose best interest?" Monday, May 8].

While there are several valid points made in the article [i.e.: tenure, evaluations], there are also some sweeping generalizations and assumptions that cannot be overlooked or lauded.

One cannot overlook the personal relationships between faculty members and members of the student body. Groups are made up of individuals, and it is the interaction of individuals within and between groups which form the bases for relationships between the groups as entities. It is our impressions of individuals of various groups that are the bases of our opinions of the groups as wholes.

In response to Mr. Martus' charge of non-cooperation with evaluations: let's look at the positive side. For years we have fought the attitude that student evaluations are invalid, but in the past year evaluations have been released and made available to the public. It is my belief that there will be greater pressure within the faculty to release grades, particularly if students are supportive of faculty demands.

I have some problems accepting your assessment of how the faculty view us students. In what context was Robert Wolff's statement, "We, the faculty, are the university" made?

For all I know, it was in response to a statement that the Campus Pond gold fish are the university. I'm also not quite sure how to dispute the alleged claim that we undergraduates often appear to be "provincial, a-intellectual, and having a dysfunctional culture."

I have never modified my own views in papers or exams, even when presenting them to teachers of totally opposite biases, and have never received academic reprisal. I don't think the claim "as students we often have to modify our positions" can be satisfactorily substantiated or documented.

. Grades will be withheld from OSCAR only for those students who are not graduating, transferring, leaving, on academic probation, or receiving financial aid. As one of those [perhaps proportionately few] students who does not fall into any one of these categories, I heartily support the faculty's proposal to keep OSCAR in secrecy regarding my grades, particularly as they have said they will inform us students.

We are not pristine-pure [fortunately!] when it comes to protest against the administration. Five weeks ago we intentionally halted the administrative process in Whitmore [Remember hearing the telephone answered by a courteous, "Good evening, we've occupied the Chancellor's office; may I help you?"], and we asked for faculty support. As far as I know, from my own contact with faculty members, we received it. Now that we may be slightly affected by a move against the administration by faculty, we weep about "best interests."

Drop your cynicism, Mr. Martus. If we work at it, and only if we work at it, we can form faculty-student relationships that will eventually benefit both groups. Neither groups will benefit from a split at this time, although undoubtedly the administration would be perfectly delighted to see it happen.

Kyle Hoffman

What is going on?

To the Editor:

I am impressed by what makes up the bulk of the Collegian these days — I find there excellent coverage from the Third World, on issues I want to read about and AP clips that, when I don't have time to read other papers, can fill me in other news. But I wonder at how little there is in this newspaper of any kind of reflection concerning what's going on in the head — and activities — of the "UMie" undergraduate.

It would seem to me, for example, to be headline news after this weekend that gangs of young women, high on the Schlitzorama bandwagon, vandalized Hills House South in search, apparently, of a toilet. This included throwing beer bottles around the halls, ripping pages, letters, out of open faculty mailboxes, vomiting [perhaps in unison?] on the floors and doors of the women's room, and leaving muddy tracks up and down the corridors they tramped through, in the groups they came in, tracking the beer and waste. What was happening?

A year ago, almost to-date, I made the mistake of sitting with a friend on a patch of lawn that "belonged" to the fraternity house opposite the Newman Center. Being duly warned ["Get off our property!"] we were pelted with a dozen eggs. When I called the head of Greek affairs, I was told that "Boys will be Boys — it's Spring, you know." A couple of weeks later, a friend's six year old boy, playing with his friends on another "private" lawn behind Hills House, was threatened by a group of the Brothers that he would be picked up and put in their kitchen oven. [These people were taken to court, and I understand that the judge didn't let their lawyers get a word in edgewise.] I have walked along the sidewalk of North Pleasant, and had someone driving by stick his head out the window and say, "Fuck You, Lady." Another day, I watched a person go up to a van parked near the Reflection Pool and kick it three times, swearing to himself, and walk on. What's going on?

Today's Collegian had a small column about the arrest of a Southwest resident for assaulting and attempting to rob a janitor. Last year, another resident pissed on the head of an elevator repairman working on the top of the elevator while the doors were propped open — and, the story went, nearly electrocuting the man. Having spent time in Southwest myself, I no longer expect the bannisters on the stairs to be repaired, or the broken window, or the junk cleared up out front of John Adams — who can keep up with it? It was smart of one fraternity to park a car on their lawn and decide to communally decimate it — and after they had, they left all the pieces, along with the cans, the papers, the rubber, wrappers, the gum, and the shrapnel, for all the rest of us to admire. [Testimony? "We are what we eat"?]

It is ironic that the toilet the Schlitzorama Girls were "using" last Saturday was only newly appointed for Women — the downstairs one in Hills having become too dangerous, recently, there having been one reported rape since January, the perpetrator, need it be said, being a UMass student.

I come from New York City, where violence is to a certain extent taken for granted, and to the extent possible, understood. People live with it, others write about it, try to do something, and the press, after an electricity crisis, reports that the looters are "animals", or reports that others report that they are.

It is odd, to me, in the Pioneer Valley, that these peaceful, relatively comfortable and privileged "children of the times" are somehow only being hit by your old Spring Fever. More odd, that the College newspaper, evidently so concerned with violence — for example in its extensive coverage of South Africa — seems to be so uninterested in also taking a critical look at its own Backyard.

A positive attitude

paul cronin

There has been a rather deep feeling of pessimism running through the campus this semester. The general mood seems to be that the place is headed down the tubes, and very quickly at that.

Cynics have been pointing to the Collegian dispute, saying that it proves that students can't even agree on lunch. People take a look at Whitmore and the Central Office and see that most administrators aren't around long enough even to have lunch, hired at 9:00 a.m., quit before the 10:30 coffee break. The dorms are disaster areas, the cost of one year here is about the same as a new car, or a down payment on a house. The faculty is mumbling about a strike. Students are suffering from one of the worst cases of Spring Fever in recent years. In short, the place apparently is in a hopeless mess.

The current faculty collective bargaining situation is not encouraging, to be sure. The faculty thinks that the administration couldn't care less about the faculty. Some people in the administration think some faculty members are selfish little cry-babies. Feelings are running just as high in the Collegian, struggle: neither side looks upon the other with much respect, both sides think the other is stubborn, self-serving, and uninterested in solving the problem.

But why not look at the brighter side and say "AH, not so!" Despite rising costs, UMass is still the best educational buy in the state. Sure, we have departments that would be disgraced by a half-decent high school, but who doesn't? We have a lot of top-flight people teaching on this campus, but al to often people seem to ignore that. There are plenty of faculty members who still consider teaching their number one priority.

Its all too easy to look at the dark side of these campus controversies. In many ways turmoil on college campus can be a good sign. It shows that there are people who care about the institution and its future. Would we really prefer a quiet, indolent campus, located somewhere in Happy Valley, with everybody floating around in oblivion? On this campus, for better or worse, many people have decided to take an active role in campus activities. While everyone may not agree on the issues, and sometimes lines get drawn so hard that we can't always talk, at least people aren't letting things slide when they believe something is wrong.

How can we continue the discussion issues without it becoming destructive? If we believe someone is involved in an issue only for reasons that are selfserving, we should confront that person. Their position and motivation should be carefully examined. Its not bad to have to dissention within the ranks. Sometimes dissention can keep a group on its toes, making sure that it is always aware of its goals and philosophy.

People should have more self confidence. There is nothing more disheartening than someone hanging his/her head when talking about UMass. We should all be talking the place up. That doesn't mean we should hide the problems, but we shouldn't think that the university is useless either. This seems especially important now. We will be getting a new President very shortly. High school seniors are choosing colleges right now. If we show that we have some kind of optimism about UMass, we will be able to attract a good person to take the President's job, and convince some gifted students and faculty to come here.

Showing a positive attitude can show the Legislature and the Governor that we care about UMass, and perhaps that will go some way in pushing for a decent budget. We're ahead of the game already. At least no one connected with the University has been mentioned as having something to do with the MBM scandal. For little things we can be thankful.

In any case, this rambling attempt at a column is just trying to say that we've got a lot more going for ourselves than we will recognize or take credit for. Times are tough, but these problems are not insoluable. Many of them can be solved with a little cooperation and positive thinking.

Bad 'good times'

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

It was not, as my colleagues from the Collegian's "Southwest Bureau" would have us believe in their page two story in yesterday's paper, "simply...a party for those who cared to attend."

What took place early Wednesday morning in Southwest was a mob scene.

It may have started out with a few students hollering out their windows to celebrate a Bruins victory over the Philadelphia Flyers in the playoffs, (no one knows for sure) but it climaxed with 500-to 1000 students (there aren't any official estimates) standing in the Southwest concourse cheering loudly as toilet paper, desk chairs, a ping pong table and a large outdoor wooden message board went up in a bonfire. Meanwhile onlookers up in the high rise dorms screamed obscenities, blasted stereos, threw confetti, poured buckets of water, hurled rolls of flaming toilet paper and sent all types of fireworks out of their windows.

This is not my idea of a party.

The reason that it turned into such an active and lengthy affair, so the word goes, is that students needed a release valve to vent their frustrations built up over a long semester, and that they are hitting the highpoint now with the onset of final exams.

That, I'm afraid, is a poor excuse for what happened. And I don't care what the people in the psychology and sociology departments say.

Blaring of stereos, screaming obscenities and even dropping some confetti out of windows is tolerable. Though it may keep some students from studying or sleeping, and add some work for the physical plant (sorry guys), at least there is nothing dangerous about it.

But the line has to be drawn there. People who toss blockbusters, cherry-bombs, and flaming rolls of toilet paper out of their windows, especially knowing that there is a large crowd of people below, are immature, demented and obviously don't know how to control themselves. And it doesn't matter how many beers they sucked down.

The same holds true for the morons who got a kick out of turning University property into a bonfire. These are probably the same fools who urinate out their windows and smash beer bottles on the ground. They already had the mentality for destruction, they just needed the thrill of a crowd cheering them on to become pyromaniacs.

And a crowd they had, a crowd of students who would probably consider themselves intelligent and mature. None the less they stood outside while objects came flying down near them. They chanted and cheered mindlessly, while equipment they will complain about not having went up in flames.

Some objects were sacred though. A couple of young fellas attempted to throw an American flag on top of the flaming heap, but a few of the more patriotic pyros grabbed it away from them and saved the students of Southwest from total disgrace.

The fact that University property (therefore students') went up in flames is bad enough. Art Clifford of the University News Bureau, said there was an estimated "several hundred dollars worth of damage."

But what makes this worse is that although none of them did, any of the people standing outside could have found themselves in the infirmary or worse yet, the city morgue, if they had been hit with one of the flying objects.

That never ocurred to those happy-go-lucky party-goers Wednesday morning because they were just having a gooooooood time.

Oh yes; a similar "celebration" took place in Southwest in September 1975 after the Red Sox won the American League championship. Back then, some residents of John Adams Tower dropped a large refrigerator and some desk chairs out of the building. But the bonfire that night consisted only of toilet paper.

A day at the State House

damon thomas

One visit to the state house in Boston will give a student more practical knowledge of the workings of Massachusetts state government than could any political science course on the subject. Every citizen of the Commonwealth — at least every UMass student — should tour the state house, for what it's worth, at least once in a lifetime. For it is where bottle bills are defeated, where capital punishment is supported, where inadequate public higher educational budgets are passed, and where 1001 other decisions affecting every Massachusetts citizen's daily life are made.

It isn't often that I journey to the state house. Such pilgrimages are few and far between for me; I am currently averaging one visit every 20.65 years. So, when I did manage to go to our Commonwealth's Political Den of Iniquity a few days ago, it was as a strange and curious newcomer.

Now, I must admit that my visit to the capitol was not a premeditated, well-planned action, motivated out of an intense desire to learn all that I could about the oftentimes corrupt and chaotic Massachusetts legislature. On the contrary, I was returning from a brief stay in Quebec, and the people I was riding with saw fit to leave me off at a spot near Boston Common which happened to be only 200 yards away from said state house. I then decided to check out the capitol building because I reasoned that I would probably never again come that close to doing so.

The first thing a visitor to the Massachusetts state house notices is the large, shining golden dome atop the building. The second thing the visitor observes from the front end of the building is the very long stairway leading up to the doorway. This stairway is where the reporters stand while television cameras focus upon them, with the stairway, the state house, and its golden dome as a background. Very romantic. If the visitor is fortunate and strong enough to make it up the stairs and to the doorway, the next obstacle is to open any one of the four doors, each of which weighs approximately eight tons.

Once inside the state house, all that can be seen are polished marble and granite walls, floors, and columns (not editorial columns, of course, but pillars). Here and there I saw groups of grammar school children being shown the busts (sculptered heads — complete with birthmarks) of the various white, male heroes that have impregnated our illustrious (cough) state's history.

Generally speaking, the rest of the building is composed of many winding stairways and a few miles of corridors housing scores of offices. In these offices sit our elected representatives and senators. Sometimes they sit there by themselves. Sometimes they sit with their secretaries. Sometimes they sit in committees. Sometimes they even stand. Sometimes they sit and think. And, as the saying goes, "Sometimes they just sits."

Anyway, I was told that within these rooms some very heavy discussions take place. Representatives and senators pop in on each other, lobbyists for every conceivable group pop in and out of these offices (and the chamber rooms and main assembly room, where lots of final decisions on issues are made). Even constituents like myself are allowed to drop in and talk with (or, in my case, lease a message for) their senator or representative.

There are lots of seemingly "busy" men and woman running about, looking important; many of them are faceless bureaucrats who dare not smile unless they are in front of a camera — even then only if it's politically expedient. Many of these "People's servants" in government were really well-dressed, if by well-dressed we mean wearing suit and tie or skirt. I suppose wearing such clothing automatically boosts one's performance and intelligence level. Maybe I was overly conscious of dress because, fresh from my trip to Canada, I was hauling around a backpack, wearing a headband, and walking about with rolled-up dungarees. Apparently, some people still haven't gotten used to denims and duffel.

Getting dirty looks from some of the politicians and well-dressed "people" there didn't bother me as much as knowing that these folks have a great deal of power. They determine things like UMass budgets and mental health budgets. These are the men and women to whom the citizens of Massachusetts supposedly entrust their monies and futures with. That whole capitol building was built with the sweat of laborers and is being paid for by the tax dollars of the very people whom our elected officials are supposed to serve. I wonder sometimes, if all of them keep these little things in mind. Or if they simply fret over the physical appearance of visitors to their private public workplace.

I am convinced, though, that a real education and insight into the workings of Massachusetts state government is to be had if one simply remained in a state house toilet stall all day long. I was in a stall that afternoon for about 20 consecutive minutes to relieve myself of excess cargo and during that time I managed to overhear some interesting conversations concerning reasons for voting on issues, people's personal lives, and the latest word on the on-and-off-the-job activities of various state political figures. I suggest that the real debate undergirding the major decisions made in the state house is conducted in its restrooms. I propose the application of the more accurate term "toileting" to replace the erroneous and outdated "lobbying" that is so often used to describe behind-the-scene influencing of legislative action.

After about three hours of wandering around the building, I finally departed for home. But, I think I may go back to that place someday just to see if anything's changed. And, next time, I'll bring a tape recorder along with me. (Remember what the Watergate tapes revealed to the nation?)

The Massachusetts state house. Experience it — you'll be amazed.

All women... not just feminists

To the Editor:

The "occupation" of the Collegian office is, as far as I am concerned, a disgrace and totally assinine. It is not because I am not for the feminist movement, as long as it stands for equal rights. In my opinion the reasons for the "occupation" are equal and separate.

No, women are not a special interest group, but the radical feminists currently "occupying" the Collegian officer certainly are. Their issue is not Women's pages, but feminist pages and feminist editorial control. A letter to the Collegian from the Southwest Women's Center states that women must have editorial control because of ".... the inability of the Collegian to present a feminist view."

In literature distributed by supporters of the occupation, a complaint is made that part of an interview with feminist Andrea Dworkin was cut from the paper and replaced with an article on another woman who was opposed to feminist principles. In other words, their complaint is they want their radical views in and do not care how other women feel. They say they represent half the population of the university. This is ridiculous. The occupiers do not want space for the objective reporting of women's news, but simply a public forum for their own philosophies.

Women's news is everyone's news and should be integrated into the paper like everything else. Do you really support the concept of "separate but equal?" Two weeks ago when poet Adrienne Rich was giving a reading on Campus, she barred men from entering the auditorium and listening to the reading. Is this fair and equal? I can imagine your reactions if women were barred from some public event on campus.

End the "occupation." Stop denying others rights which you yourselves enjoy [i.e. free access to the press and to all areas of a public hearing]. Take the forty inches per day the Collegian has given you and show your opinions on "women's" views objectively and fairly, so all women are represented, and not just feminist views.

"One good weekend"

To the Editor:

This past weekend was the date of the annual spring concert, but it also was the date of a Coolidge dorm camping trip. The trip was sponsored by upper and lower Coolidge governments and was planned and designed to offer Coolidge residents an alternative to the spring concert weekend.

Originally the trip's destination was Kancamangus Highway in New Hampshire, but we found out only hours before departure time that New Hampshire still had loads of snow. A few last-minute adjustments and phone calls were made, and we decided that a section of Appalachian Trail in Connecticut would suit our group much better weather-wise.

We loaded up our rented van with ten half-sleeping bodies and what seemed like a small mountain of backpacks bright and early Saturday morning. The drive to Macedonia State Park in Connecticut went by fast and before we knew it, we all were slaving and sweating along the Appalachian Trail.

To make a long story short, the hiking and countryside were just beautiful. We met some neat people and did some neat things. Who'll ever forget "lungs", the "bubble gum dilemma," "hiker" Betsey, or the guys who drove their pickup into that big hole. I surely won't, and I don't think Penny, Kris, Paul, Betsey, Frank, Ruth, Nancy, Ana, or Georgette will either for quite a while. It sure was one good weekend.

Full disclosure on BAMF

To the Editor:

Over past few weeks it has been an interesting experience to read the ongoing debate of what I did or did not say. Many of the wild accusations of cultural bias and bigotry seem uncalled for and irresponsible, especially since not one of these gentlemen has ever met me. It is sad indeed, that most people still separate their musical preferences strictly along color lines. It is this type of person who also separates the rest of his life into color coded cubicles.

My concern lies strictly with the financial aspect of this affair. If Kwaku or Leon or whatever his name is this year is not willing-able to provide full disclosure of expenditures, somebody should make these figures public. I am certain that thousands of students would like to know exactly what it is costing them for this Spring Concert Replacement and who is getting how much and for what. With yet another increase in fees coming up next semester I for one am concerned with spending the money where it benefits the largest number of people and not just a narrow interest group. Let us not argue the about the merits of performers, they will speak for themselves with their music, let's instead find out if our concert funds were well spent or thrown out the window by unprofessional ineptness. I am tired of hearing all this separatist rhetoric from both sides, there are only losers in such confrontations. To reduce a musical event to a black-white argument takes much away from it.

The members of this University have the right to know exactly where their money is going. We demand full disclosure of all expenditures concerning the B.A.M.F.

Zorba's management change is for the better

restaurant review

By LAUREN TRAUB

Zorba's
8 Green St., Northampton
open weekdays and Sat. 10:30 a.m. to 12 midnite, Sun. 2 to 10:00

Zorba's in Northampton, right on the edge of Smith College, and adjacent to Green Street's interesting little shops has long been a favorite of Smith women and their dates. It has changed management in the last month or so and apparently for the better. Red tablecloths cover tables, but the menu and ambiance are still informal. Zorba's is on two levels separated by just a few steps. There are also two tables in the front windows, each raised from the floor by a few steps forming a semi-private alcove where diners can look out on the street, or at the other diners below, or just gaze at each other if they are so inclined. A refrigerator case near the kitchen displays the wines, spinach pie, and various desserts.

The menu is an attractive fold out with the name "Zorba's" and a delightful drawing of an old man enjoying his simple lunch of bread, wine, and pipe, on the cover. Inside, appetizers, salads, regular and pouch sandwiches, dinners, pizzas, and pastries make up the menu. Taramosalata is a Greek appetizer based on salty smoothly beaten caviar. Homous and spinach pie with feta cheese are among the appetizers also. And one particularly delicious appetizer is called Sakannaki, which is salty kasseri cheese broiled in a casserole dish and then flamed at the table with brandy, which leaves its flavor on the cheese. Sometimes the brandy refuses to cooperate in igniting, but when this happened to us, our undaunted waitress made several attempts and finally triumphed in flaming the dish. Lemon is squeezed over the cheese by the diners and then the crusty melted cheese is eaten on pita bread, or by itself. It is addicting. Minestrone as soup of the day was homemade and full of vegetables and pasta, but on the bland side.

Greek salads come in small ($1.45) and large ($2.85) and consist of lettuce, hot vinegar peppers, onions, and tomatoes with feta cheese liberally sprinkled over the top. Cucumber and shaved cabbage are billed as being in the salad, but seemed to be missing on one occasion. A nicely herbed oil and vinegar dressing with a suggestion of fresh garlic was tossed with the iceberg lettuce in this salad.

The pouch sandwiches are stuffed with what seems like a whole salad's worth of lettuce with dressing, which can make them rather perilous to consume while attempting to retain one's poise and dignity. The souvlaki sandwich ($2.60) has charcoal broiled chunks of tender lamb with salad in the pouch. Falafel ($2.40) are soft fried balls of "chick" pea dough and spices, with sauce, and the gyro pouch (also $2.40) had the ground lamb, beef, and spices baked together like meat loaf, then cut into uniform slices and placed over the sald in the pouch, with a creamy yogurt dressing. One suggestion to the cooks, is that these sandwiches would be easier to eat if the meats or falafel were placed inside the pouch instead of over the salad where they are prone to falling out.

Seven dinners are offered, ranging from $2.25 for spaghetti with sauce ($2.95 for sausage or meatball added) to $4.95 for the souvlaki dinner with rice, Greek salad, and bread. Pastitsio dinner ($4.50) sounds unusual and promising with layers of spiced ground sirloin and noodles topped with bechamel sauce and baked, served with bread and salad. The pasta of the manicotti ($3.80 with bread and salad) was al dente, retaining its texture and pleasant chewiness, but the ricottta filling was light on the promised herbs, and the sauce was too bland, similar to the Franco-American canned version. Veal cutlet [illegible], baked [illegible], and gyro kebab [illegible] the other dinner offerings.

Pizzas come in small and large sizes and range in price from $2.00 for a small cheese and tomato to $7.10 for a large Zorba Special with "the works". Pizzas on the table next to ours sent their heavenly aroma toward us in beckoning, and will be a priority to sample on our next trip to Zorba's.

Wine and beer are served. A definite advantage for those who like to experiment with different wines is the fact that most wines offered on the wine list are available by the glass, as well as by the carafe or bottle. And speaking of beverages, with the salty and spicy nature of the food served here, it would be well appreciated by diners if they were routinely served water with meals, instead of having to ask.

The pastries and desserts are homemade, like almost everything else here, and include crisp baklava, kateifi — like baklava, but the filo dough is shredded, birds nests which are filo filled with ground pistachio nut filling, and Greek lady fingers, all at $.90. Halva with cashews, served in wedges, is also homemade, and $.90. Rum cake and cannoli, though not on the menu, are usually offered. Greek coffee, espresso, comomile or honey tea, or spiced hot apple cider are nice accompaniments to dessert.

UMass water polo club finishes successful year

By BOB CORB
Collegian Staff

The UMass water polo club has recently completed one of its most successful seasons. The club sponsored two men's and a women's team, and played a record thirty-seven games. More than thirty members actively participated in the short spring season.

The men's "B" team, led by junior goalkeeper and club president Bill Tharion, fashioned a frustrating 3-8 season with good victories over Tufts and Boston University. Senior John Gallagher led the "B" team with 16 goals this season, and had a super game at home against Boston College. Rookie Tom O'Brian showed good promise with his speed and heads up play. Veterans Dave Young, Carl Lukins, Joel Meltz and Jim McIver helped round out a "B" team that was better than its final record.

The women's team lost to only one team all season, but their final record was 5- The women dominated every team they beat, but could not overcome an experienced Boston College squad in their three frustrating losses. The women lost to B.C. 6-5 in the finals of the Wellesley tourny, to cap off a frustrating season. Experienced veterans Adrienne Fredey, Nancy Campbell, Becca Reggio, Rachel Mach, and Debbie Schwarz teamed up with newcomers Celia Walsh, Roxanne Balducci and Maryanne Primervera to form the nucleus of a strong team for next year.

The men's "A" team was the class of this spring's club. The "A" team finished with a 14-3-1 record, including one 3rd, one 2nd, and two 1st place finishes in weekend tournaments. The men defeated arch-rival Boston College three times, including a home and away series. Without the services of a coach, and without ever having the entire team together for one game, the "A" team beat most of the best teams in the east. The team travelled as far as Bucknell, Pa., and gained the respect of opposing teams and coaches everywhere it played. This year's team was led by senior goaltender Ric Notini, and high scorers Russ Yarworth and Duncan Lomas. Transfer Geoff Miller and five year veteran Henry Maclean, along with ever-steady Bob Corb and Rick Mansfield help round out a super strong starting team. For the first year ever, the UMass bench was its strength with Chris Lomas, George Collias, and Joe Hebert supplying excellent relief help.

As the water polo club winds down its spring season with its annual spring bash this Sunday, we look forward to a strong fall season and encourage anyone interested to contact any of the club officers through the intramural office.

Trackwomen hit NEs

By BARBARA CALLANAN
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I — Highlighted by Diana Sealy's four winning performances, the Minutewomen track team easily overcame the University of Rhode Island, 81-37 Wednesday.

"It was a relaxed meet," commented Assistant Track Coach Charlotte Lettis. "But it also provided a good workout for the New England's tomorrow."

In competing in this weekend's meet, the women will be faced with an unusually tough challenge. Although they've been undefeated in dual meets for over two years, much of their success has depended on their tremendous depth. However, tomorrow's outcome will require many "super" individual performances.

Sealy is one such individual, as in little over an hour's time Wednesday, she managed to anchor the winning 400 meter relay (52.2) and then swiftly overtake every competitor in the 100 (13.1), 200 (27.2), and 400 (58.0) meter dashes.

Other top individuals Cindi Martin, Nancy Cominoli, Laurie Wolf, Linda Welzel, Debbie Farmer and Karen Show all sat out the URI meet, but were only resting for tomorrow and will be ready to turn in top quality efforts.

Not all of the Minutewomen's top performers sat out the URI meet, though. Bonnie Bukowski, Tina Francario and Sue Swartz, who are all coming off either injuries or illness, all managed to win their events (800, 1500 and 3000 meters, respectively).

Freshman Cathy Harrington was a double winner in the hurdles (18.1) and the high jump (5'0"). She came back to finish third in the long jump with teammates Julie Horgan and Linda Stillman finishing first (16'3½") and second (16'), respectively. Another freshman, Marianne Stravinskas won the discus, and the 400 meter relay team of Karolyn Shea, Bukowski, Stillman and Sealy swept by the U.R.I. team for an impressive victory.

The Minutewomen were helped along to their win by the good weather conditions, a dry, fast track and the congenial atmosphere provided by their amiable hosts.

Those seniors were honored in the last regular season game of their careers by being started by Garahan, and Judy Kennedy (2 goals), Allyson Toney (1), Kibling (1) and Cathy Gipps (1) responded

Those four and Olivia Lovelace, Kelly Salls and transfer Fiona McAllister, the only senior with previous lacrosse experience, closed out their last regular campaign by outscoring their opposition 135-47.

To emplify their offensive firepower, Garahan pointed out that in four games of the recent New England tournament, champ UMass scored 47 goals, the same number the team allowed in a whole season.

Glots capture IM soccer

By JIM GOMES
Collegian Staff

In an excellently played game, the Glots won the intramural soccer title which so narrowly escaped them last year by defeating the Alcoholics, 1-0 yesterday evening.

The Glots carried the play from the starting whistle. Center-forward Barry Siadat, right wing Dave Carly, and center halfback Tom Draudt applied pressure on the Alcoholic defense keeping the play in the Alcoholic end of the field.

Alcoholic goalie, Steve Wark, who made two superb saves in the contest, booted a low goal kick which was picked off by Siadat. The Glot forward was breaking in alone on net, but Alcoholic fullback Jim Davis prevented him from scoring by booting the ball out of Siadat's control.

After a violation was called by the referees, Glot fullback Ernie Schultz booted a direct kick on the goal where Draudt headed the ball to Siadat. The Iranian graduate student faked the goalie and passed to a wide open Curt Grajewski who stroked the ball into the open net with 2:05 remaining in the first half.

The Alcoholics had their best chance at a goal a minute later, but forward Dan Maher kicked the ball over the crossbar.

The second half was spiced with a display of fine defensive soccer. Glot fullbacks Schultz, John Robbins, and Jessie Kermit playing ball-hawking defense did not allow a threatening shot to test goalie, Geddes Perkins, who did not allow a goal during the intramural season. Alcoholic goalie, Wark made a diving save thwarting a point blank attempt by Glot forward Tom Norton.

Fireball-II will take place tonight at dusk-or approximately 8 p.m. on the upper Nope (Wope to us veterans) fields, just below Brown House tennis courts.

The Indian-originated game is a hot version of soccer. It is played with a ball made up of rags, which is soaked in Kerosene, and ignited at midfield. Back in the olden days, the Indians also let the ball sit for a couple minutes, because sometimes it had a tendency to explode. Then the boldest brave would take matters into his own hands and start play.

Tonight's game will consist of residents of Cashin's third floor, ex-lacrosse players and soccer players, but anyone can play — by contacting Steve Zinkowski (303 Cashin) at 546-5975. All that is necessary is a pair of sweatpants and hockey gloves, both as precautionary measures.

The object naturally is to kick the 'rag ball' between the also inflamed goalposts. The team that scores the most goals before the ball breaks apart and extinguishes itself wins the contest.

According to Zinkowski, who as a senior looks at this as "going out in a blaze of glory" a practice game will be played first-lasting about ten minutes-using a smaller ball. Once the crowd shows up, the big game will begin.

Kevin Patterson, of UMass lacrosse fame, organized last year's Fireball-I contest. But alas, the 'Chief' has long since gone.

Fireball-could be the hottest game on foot.

Undefeated Lee wins 5th

Jim Rice smacked his 11th home run of the season with a man on in the third, and the Red Sox withstood a ninth inning Baltimore rally, as undefeated Bill Lee upped his record to 5-0 with a 5-4 win over the Orioles last night.

The Sox jumped on top in the second when Fred Lynn, who had three hits, tripled to left field and scored on a sacrifice fly by Dwight Evans. Baltimore knotted the score in the bottom of the inning on a sacrifice fly by Rich Dauer.

Rice's blast put the Sox ahead 3-1 until the seventh, when Bob Stanley relieved Lee and surrendered a run-scoring single to pinch hitter Terry Crowley.

The Red Sox scored two big insurance runs in the top of the ninth, as Butch Hobson singled, Evans walked, and Bernie Carbo drove home pinch runner Frank Duffy with a single off reliever Don Stanhouse. The fifth run scored when Kiko Garcia bobbled Jerry Remy's grounder for an error.

Baltimore scored two runs in the bottom of the ninth on a sacrifice fly by Eddie Murray and a run scoring single by Lee May, but Dick Drago got Doug DeCinces on a fly ball to Rice to pick up his third save.

Baltimore starter Dennis Martinez was charged with the loss, dropping his record to 3-2.

JVs bring down curtain and end on winning note

By WALT CHERNIAK
Collegian Staff

The UMass JV baseball team finished its season on a positive note on Monday, as they blasted Amherst 11-1 and finished their season at 14-9-1.

Coach Jim Bedard's troops split a doubleheader last Thursday with Westfield St. and Amherst, and also split a twinbill on Saturday at Springfield.

Frank Letizia keyed the Amherst win with three singles and three runs scored as the sophomore infielder concluded a fine campaign. UMass scored in the first on a Jason Thomas single, another hit by Tom Grimes, and a wild pitch, and never trailed, as they banged out eleven hits, scoring four runs in the third, and five more in the fourth to take a 10-0 lead.

Lefties Mark Waslick and Scott Hildreth limited the Lord Jeffs to only one run and four hits in the seven inning game.

Hildreth had contributed a complete game, six hit victory over Westfield State on Thursday, as half of the squad won a 6-1 victory, scoring five unearned runs, thanks to seven Westfield errors.

Back at UMass, things didn't go as well, as the rest of the team squandered a 5-0 lead, and lost 6-5 to Amherst, as Greg Popovich took the loss, allowing five hits in his seven stint. The Lord Jeffs scored all of their runs in the last three innings, including the winner in the top of the seventh.

On Saturday afternoon, the JVs travelled to Springfield to face arch-rival Springfield College in a doubleheader. Bedard sent his two top hurlers, Mark Brown and Chuck Thompson to the mound, but only came away with a split.

Brown was "just wild enough to get hit" in the opener, as he allowed seven walks and eight hits and lost 7-5. Mark Litano collected two singles and a double, and Jason Thomas had two hits and two runs batted in, but it wasn't enough, as Springfield tallied four times in the fourth to beat Brown, who struck out nine despite the loss.

Chuck Thompson, who lost only one game this season, came through in the nightcap, as he twirled a neat six-hitter and held on for a 4-3 victory. Letizia again starred at the plate with a single, double and triple and two rbis.

The 14-9-1 finish marks the end of another successful season for Bedard and the JVs, who hope to impart some of the talent that won for them upon the varsity squad next year.

Johnson to coach gymmen

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

As next September comes around and a new semester begins, new students won't be the only addition to this university. The UMass men's gymnastics team will have a new head coach, replacing former head coach Dick Swetman. The athletic department made the official decision Wenesday that it will be former UMass grad Roy Johnson taking the position.

Johnson, a former competitor for the UMass gymnastics team during the Tom Dunn era, was chosen after a long decisive process by athletic director Frank McInerney. The job was a toss up between Johnson and Ward Black of Washington State, and after weighing the advantages and disadvantages of both that were presented by Coach Swetman. The department cited that Johnson was the best possible choice for the position.

Leaving also with Coach Swetman will be assistant coach Joel James, who will be replaced by Paul Marks. Marks who was also a former competitor under Tom Dunn and a teammate of Roy Johnson, should prove to be quite a coaching team. Each complements the other in coaching style, with one's weakness the other's strength.

Another change is in the captain's position, where all-arounder Bob Donahue was voted in as team solo-captain for next year, over present captain Steve Nunno. The team's most valuable player was decided at the team picnic this past weekend to be Dave Kulakoff.

As Coach Swetman leaves his position at the end of this semester, it marks the end of a Penn State dynasty of coaching here at UMass. The first Penn State graduate to coach at UMass was Tom Dunn who held the position for four years. Bob Koenig followed Dunn and finally present coach Dick Swetman, making a spread of seven years. It is also interesting to note that all were teammates while at Penn State.

It will now be up to Roy Johnson to fill the shoes of those that have gone before him. Luckily Johnson has had a little help, for while under Coach Dunn, a large amount of coaching style was picked up and learned by Johnson. Plus the added personality similarities between the two is amazing. Another advantage for Coach Johnson will be his tremendous compatibility with the administration and athletic director Frank McInerney. Only time itself will tell how things will work out, as most gymnasts look forward to a very prosperous year ahead.

UMass men's track team to host New Englands

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's track squad will compete and play host to 30 different teams and over 300 area competitors, as the 91st New England Track Championships will be staged on the Minutemen track tomorrow and Sunday.

All athletes competing in tomorrow's contest have registered times or distances that comply with the meet's qualifying standards. UMass is represented in 16 events of the 19 event program that features trails, beginning at 12:30 tomorrow, and finals starting at 12:00 on Sunday.

"Thirty-nine of our kids qualified for the New Englands. That's unusual for a meet of this caliber," stated head coach Ken O'Brien. "I doubt any other team has more people competing."

Heading the list of Minutemen qualifiers is last year's steeplechase winner, Kevin McCusker. McCusker is the lone UMass performer who will have the honor of defending his title.

Recently voted most valuable track athlete, Joe Martens will suit up for the 440 yard dash, the same event that rewarded the co-captain with runner up recognition in last year's meet.

Although competing under the heading of freshman, Don Dowden has weathered the pressure of his first year status. This past winter he won the Yankee Conference high jump crown and is expected to challenge his school record of 6'10" during Sunday's festivities.

Senior Mark Healy is still a question mark in the 440 intermediate hurdles, as a pulled hamstring suffered two weeks ago could hold back his performance tomorrow. His time in the hurdles this year sits among the top five performances registered in New England this season.

Approximately a third of the selected batch of tracksters representing UMass tomorrow is made up of freshmen. Paving the road for the Minutemen youth is javelin thrower Paul Derby. Derby will participate in the event that spearheaded him into the UMass freshman record books two weeks ago at the Penn Relays. Also proudly representing the first year men is this year's Yankee Conference 3-mile champion Mike Dorion. Dorion will test his fortunes against the best in the Northeast as he competes in the 6 mile tomorrow.

Contrasting the Minutemen youth will be the Minutemen veterans, as eleven seniors will bid farewell to the Llewellyn Derby Track. Among those graduating this Spring will be distance men Frank Carroll and Tom Wolff in the 3-mile, and Neal McGrail and Bob Neil entered in the 6-mile.

Two field event men will also give their final performance in a Minuteman uniform. Brady Mayer and Ted Power will say goodbye in the triple jump and pole vault, respectively.

Co-captain John Richards will finish his track career in the 440 intermediate hurdles tomorrow. Rich Thompson and Fran O'Keefe will conclude theirs in fitting style with the last event on the two day card, the mile relay.

Mitwomen advance

The UMass softball team advanced in the Eastern Regionals yesterday with a doubleheader sweep, defeating Southern Connecticut 4-3 and taking Springfield College 3-1 in the nightcap.

Undefeated sophomore pitcher Sue Peters improved her record to 8-0, as she won both games of the twinbill.

The mitwomen were trailing 2-0 in the fifth, but scored on a two-run single by Kathy Horrigan, and picked up the winning runs on a two-run base hit by Carol Bruce in the sixth.

Peters and Rhonda McManus collected two hits apiece in the nightcap, as the Minutewomen won, 3-1.

Batmen battle Amherst

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass baseball team in their continuing struggle to reach the ECAC tournament will take on Amherst College today at 3 p.m. on Lorden Field.

Following the game with the Lord Jeffs the Minutemen (now 16-10 Northern trip and 9 of the last 12) will make their final push to the playoffs with doubleheaders against Sienna (Sunday 1:00) and Brown (Monday 1:00) also at home.

While the Amherst game will be important to UMass' overall record it will not have the significance of the two twinbills, since Brown and Sienna are both Div. I opponents. A good showing is essential if UMass hopes to get any consideration for the tourney.

Today's game could provide a special bonus if Amherst's scheduled pitcher Bill Siwacki steps to the mound. Siwacki has been considered one of the finest athletes ever to come out of the small school. He has accomplished the rare feat of playing three sports; football, basketball, and baseball. His football skills were considerable enough to be drafted by the N.Y. Giants as a tight end. His baseball talents meanwhile have been known a long time, originally being drafted out of high school.

The UMass bats which sprayed 13 runs againt their latest foe will hope to save a few for Mr. Siwacki. Leading the charge is team hitting leader Doug Aylward with a .413 average and the consistent bats of Mike McEvilly (.331, 28 RBI's) and Leo Kalinowski (.327).

While flaunting a team avg. of .274, UMass has held the opposition to an aggregate .222. The reliable pitching of Doug Welenc and Chris Collins and the return of Tom Nigro to his old form provide a trio that enemy bats have found hard to crack. All three will see weekend action.

Gazelles victorious again; down Plymouth St., 6-4

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's lacrosse team finished its regular season undefeated yesterday and will now move on to an exhibition tournament tomorrow at Smith College before entering the national tourney at the end of the month.

The Gazelles, now 9-0-2, beat a psyched up Plymouth State squad in Plymouth, 6-4, and will play three games in a 12 team tournament tomorrow (12:30 and 3:30 p.m.) and Sunday (9:30 a.m.), according to Coach Frank Garahan.

The tournament, composed of four college all-star teams, four club teams, two Canadian teams, UMass and Yale, is a regional event being held to select individuals for a national tournament which will be held at the same site, James Madison College in Virginia, and at the same time as the women's college tourney.

"The main reason we'll be there is to provide good opposition for these teams," said Garahan. "It's just going to be an exhibition for us, and a tuneup for the nationals."

Garahan said the national tournament would be a first time event for college women. The national individual tourney has been an annual event.

The UMass team, in only its third full season, finished its first undefeated campaign, and the first for Garahan. "I bet it was the first for a lot of the women, too," he said.

Of the 18 women on the team, only seven have had previous lacrosse experience, with one starter, Sue Kibling, being a first year player. Garahan's seniors never played before the inception of the program at UMass.

Not a goodbye column

goodbye column (good'bi' kol' m), n. [Gen., gute nauben kolum; Lat., farewella columna; AS., columbye; NBC., columbo; Jan Hyat Fan Club, columm der goot bahye], 1. a foolish, insipid, boring, in-house piece of literature, appearing late in the semester on op-ed and sports pages of certain daily student newspapers representing Massachusetts state universities. Such literature serves as an outlet for the writer as an attempt to justify his or her lackluster four (or more) years of matriculation at said university, and is of no interest whatsoever to the reader. 2. the proper salutory farewell after having completed conversation with a column.

For reasons of expedience, only the first definition will be considered herein.

There are as many different types of goodbye columns as there are ways to beat a dead horse.

For instance, there is the "Dear Abby" approach — a gossipy, elbow-nudging effort characterized by the usage of mysterious initials: "J.G., remember the time R.D. tried to steal a base in S.K.'s room on the third floor of MacKimmie? Then she X.V.'d the M.C.F., L.M.N.O.P. and mercilessly beat him over the head with a baseball bat."

The "Nixon Memoirs" treatment doesn't offer the reader much chance for mental gratification, either: "I remember UMass when I first came here as a freshman. There was no stadium, so the football team had to play all its home games at Orr Rink. I used to talk to the wooden benches."

Somewhat more informative is the "Tearjerker" penned by some poor sap who's had to cover a beat in which even the team members aren't interested: "I remember the men's frog-eating team when it was the National Champion in 1974. But the university stopped giving scholarships to promising high school frog-eaters in '75, and the ASPCA came down on the sport in '76 and later that same year half the team developed warts on their tongues ... "

The key word in these three samples is "remember." These scribes may be jogging their own memories, but they are unable to realize that for you and I these remembrances are an exercise in futility; we can't jog with them.

The proverb intones; "One man's food is another man's poison." It was never more true than when applied to the goodbye column. The event which contains the writer's moment of glory tends to bore the life out of the reader. For example:

"I was walking along the promenade of the Fine Arts Center on my way to ultimate frisbee practice when, glancing up at the bright sky, it dawned on me that the sun was just a huge, yellow Master Frisbee. The cosmos, too, was a frisbee — a black Professional model — with God owning controlling shares of Wham-O Corporation. Why, even the Earth was a frisbee! It was at this moments that I was one with the world."

Worse yet is that part of the column in which the writer "recalls" his Collegian experiences:

"Like he says, I recall my Collegian experiences. The first day I walked into the newsroom, I was confronted by this hulk seemingly made of iron and steel. I tried to converse with it, but it ignored me. It not only refused to print my story, it would not even listen to me. At times, I still wonder whatever became of that copy desk."

By far, the most putrid portion of the pitiful piece comes after the columnist realizes that the only human eyes to gaze at his work belonged to the person who sent him a letter bomb, postage due:

"If I've learned nothing else while writing for this newspaper, at least I now know that it is imperative to always keep an open mind concerning matters of opinion, and if there is anybody who disagrees with this fundamental hypothesis, I don't even want to deal with him."

A year ago, three graduating sportswriters all decided to write goodbye columns, one right after the next, each one more trivial, less relevant, than its predecessor. I laughed at those slovenly fools, as I do to this day, for their writings contained nothing of interest to sports fans — the readership for which the three were supposed to be toiling.

I swore right then and there that I would never write a goodbye column. And I never will.

Not me.

Bromery out—search continues

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery is not one of three recommended candidates the UMass Board of Trustees is considering for the office of University president at a meeting today in Boston, the Collegian has learned.

The University Presidential Search Committee reportedly will recommend to the trustees Marilyn Gittell, the assistant vice president of Brooklyn College, David Knapp, the provost of Cornell University, and James Vorenberg, a Harvard law professor.

The search committee, which met Saturday in Boston, chose the three from a list of five candidates which included Bromery and Charles Foster of Yale. The committee chose these five from the approximately 200 candidates who were originally considered to replace former UMass president Robert C. Wood who stepped down last December.

Since Wood's resignation Bromery has often expressed his desire to be offered the office of president. Last April he sent a memo to the trustees which stated his intention to resign the chancellorship effective June 1979 so he could be considered for the presidency as "equally as any outside candidate."

In a telephone interview last night Bromery said he would not comment until the trustees have chosen a definate president. "I'll have to decide what I will do after they (the trustees) make the decision. It's a highly personal decision for me," he said.

The trustees will meet at 2:30 today at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston. A newly revised open meeting law will force much of the meeting to be held in public although discussions of the candidates' characters will be held behind closed doors. The three recommended candidates are not expected to be present at the meeting.

Search committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer last night said he is not certain if the trustees will choose a president today. "You just can't tell," he said.

Paul Cronin, a student on the search committee, said it will be a very close decision. "You have three different candidates with three different styles; they are all outstanding and all pretty equal," he said last night.

Cronin said a recent Associated Press report stating Vorenberg was favored by the trustees was not true. Bryer also said reports and rumors saying one candidate is favored are false. Last week, a spokesperson for Governor Michael S. Dukakis — a member of the board — said the governor is not pushing for any one candidate.

Vorenberg, Gittell and Knapp have all been interviewed by faculty, administrators and students at the three University campuses. According to Breyer the search committee has kept to its schedule and is making the recommendations on time.

While the University has been searching for a permanent president, Franklin K. Patterson, founder of Hampshire College, has been acting as interim president.

Senate cleans up accounts

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian Staff

The undergraduate Student Senate will meet tonight to continue its discussion of the budget cuts proposed at last Wednesday's meeting, in an attempt to clean up its financial records.

According to Budget Committee member Jay Millender, this year's Budget Committee overspent itself by $38,000. But due to newly-discovered RSO deficits left over from past administrations, the final deficit for this fiscal year will amount to nearly $150,000.

Among the proposals made Wednesday was a motion to cut area government funding from its present $9.40 per head to $8 per head. Since the area governments account for such a large percentage of senate funds, such a cut would significantly decrease the deficit, said budget co-chairman Daniel Salce.

A $45,000 return from the Transportation and Parking Office, as well as voluntary cuts made by various Third World Recognized Student Organizations amounting to $20,000, will also help toward balancing the budget, both committee members said.

According to Milender, Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima tonight will recommend specific cuts to "blockbuster" RSO groups, and all other groups will be given an across-the-board cut.

"It looks like all RSO groups will get budget cuts," said Milender. "Unlike other government agencies, we can't take out loans. Out budget must balance."

Besides budget proposals, the senate will also reconsider its decision to have a summer coordinating committee composed of all elected officials and chairpersons of all senate groups. Co-presidents Bob Dion and Don Bishop vetoed the motion in favor of a president's council which would also include area government representatives, but would put more people on the payroll.

Vice chancellorship narrowed to 2 finalists by Search Committee

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A search committee seeking a new UMass vice-chancellor for student affairs has selected two finalists, sources have told the Collegian.

The search committee has forwarded to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery the names of Sandra Clark from Florida International University and Dennis Madson from Colorado State University for final consideration. Clark is assistant to the president and Madson is director of Student Services.

Bromery yesterday confirmed the two names have been presented to him, but by word-of-mouth and not officially in writing.

Search committee Chairman Jay A. Martus yesterday declined comment.

Sources also said the selection of the two "external" candidates — from outside UMass — is a blow to "internal" candidate Frederick R. Preston, current UMass associate vice-chancellor for student af-who reportedly was seeking the position. fairs, who reportedly was seeking the position.

Preston yesterday could not be reached for comment.

"I had heard there's always a tendency to go to the outside," Bromery said. He said an insider is hurt "anytime you have to make tough decisions" because persons associated with the search could be alienated.

Bromery will now evaluate the two finalists and recommend one candidate to the UMass Board of Trustees for a final decision.

He said yesterday he will probably invite each candidate back to the UMass campus for further consultation; the candidates have already visited the campus. Bromery has met once with Clark, but has never met with Madson.

"I was very impressed with UMass when I visited last November," Madson said yesterday by telephone from Colorado. "I would be particularly interested in beefing up the management side of housing.

"I think it's premature to talk about specific plans," he said. "I haven't really thought of specifics at UMass for awhile. I have lots of ideas, though."

Clark yesterday could not be reached for comment.

The 13 member search committee has been conducting the search since last May. Robert L. Woodbury has served as acting vice-chancellor for student affairs since then.

Approximately 400 candidates, including some from outside the United States, applied for the position after advertisements were placed in newspapers and letters were sent to various colleges and universities.

The search committee, comprised of undergraduates, graduates, and faculty and staff members, first narrowed the 400 candidates to a list of 20, and later to a list of six. One candidate dropped out, and the two finalists were selected Thursday from the remaining five.

Florida International University, located in Miami, has one main campus and a smaller one in North Miami. The university has six academic schools, and an enrollment of approximately 13,000.

Colorado State University is located in Fort Collins in the Colorado Rockies, and has nine academic schools.

Budgetary problems attributed

Administrators leave top jobs

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

A new president is coming to UMass. The chancellor has announced he is leaving the University. The provost is already gone.

Throughout the administrative levels of UMass, several positions are now being filled by acting personnel. Temporary administrators include Acting University President Franklin K. Patterson, Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen and Acting Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

Both administrators and students offer a variety of reasons for the turnover rate at UMass. However, budgetary problems for this state-supported institution was one reason cited by many.

Bromery

Several students and administrators also felt there has been a change of mood at the University which is tied into the budgetary problems, the state government's attitude toward UMass and the economic conditions of the state and the country.

End of UMass Growth

"The Golden Age of Higher Education is over," said Woodbury. "We don't feel as we did that education can solve all of our problems. The feeling of being on a mission is gone," he added. "Some administrators are leaving because they are getting offers that are very appealing," said the vice chancellor, citing another reason for the departure of UMass officials.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who has announced he is resigning in the spring of 1979, said, "The University has been through difficult years; morale is low due to budgetary problems. It's not a very good environment for top flight administrators. We are at the end of the growth period, or what I like to call the maturation of the University."

Bromery said a university "outgrows administrators" during rapid expansion.

"Snowball Effect"

Bromery said that while other schools also have a turnover problem, "ours is much more accute due to political and economic factors."

Paul Cronin, former Student Government Association president and student representative to the Board of Trustees, cited what he called "A snowball effect. Administrators say, 'if they're going maybe I should go too.'" Cronin, who works in Whitmore's Office of Budget and Institutional Studies, also said, "It looks like the University is getting slowly strangled by the whole budget. Some of them want to get out while it looks good so it doesn't look like rats leaving a sinking ship."

Cronin said he felt that the cause for administrative departure goes beyong the situation in state government. "It's too easy to put it all in one package and blame it on the governor." Cronin added, "I don't think there is one thread (running through all the departures.)

Puryear

Internal Relations

One Whitmore staffer also cited the end of a fast growth period in the University. "In 1971 and '72 there was a lot of optimism. New guys, Bromery and Wood, had come in. Enrollment was increasing. Now growth has slowed. We've lost a great deal of institutional momentum. All of this is not conducive to happy staffing." The staffer also said he felt the University has never really settled down. "It's still unstable; we're still groping."

Another reason cited by many is a change in relations within the University. "In 1976 the faculty union began to get more support. Administrators felt they could get more money and less headaches if they left," said Jay Martus, a former student government president now working in the office of Residential Resource Management.

Monetary Rewards

Martus also noted, "A lot of people came time to get bearings (when new people They were willing to sacrifice the monetary rewards of private enterprise. When fiscal realities showed (that achieving their goals) couldn't be done, they lost their hope and vision."

Former Provost Paul L. Puryear, who was fired by Bromery in January cited three reasons for the turnover rate of UMass administrators. "It seems to me there is a lack of clearly defined roles for administrators." Puryear said, "There is a feeling among some administrators that they don't get backing from Bromery." The former Provost, now teaching in the Afro-American Department, said, "There is pretty wide knowledge around the country that the University is poorly managed. There is a lot of waste of money and anybody who tries to grapple with that runs into trouble. Anybody who is a really good administrator would have a hard time functioning in this environment," he added.

Woodbury

Future Effects

Students and administrators have different opinions on what the turnover will mean to UMass in the future. Woodbury, who said he feels administrative jobs have become "more managerial," said, "If the resource situation gets better we can still create a new sense of mission and have greater saying power. This depends on a budgetary upturn. Clearly there has been an erosion of aspects of quality and of the ability to do new things. People have got to feel there's hope in the situation and not feeling caught on something disintegrating," Woodbury said. He said the belief that administrators were leaving due to a feeling that the Univeristy is on a decline was "too melodramatic."

Patterson

Bromery said he hoped UMass would "settle down" and that in the future "the University levels off, the Board stabalizes, the governor changes his mind of focusing on the University and will have other things to keep him busy."

Puryear said, "Acting administrators don't have a stake in the outcome. It's very unfortunate that at a very crucial time we have very few permanent administrators who will be around to chart the lone range future." The former provost said changes at the upper level will lead to "drift. It takes time to get bearings (when new people come in)."

Martus, who said that population increases had affected the University, said, "Things will only turn around with a baby boom and a shift in attitudes."

School of ed suffers

Urban studies are seriously cut

By JAMES LEWIS, JR.
Collegian Staff

The UMass School of Education and its Urban Studies program has been witnessing serious hardships due to financial cutbacks and lack of funds.

The School of Education began an encouraging growth in 1968 which peaked in the early 1970s' until it began to decline. In 1968 the school of education began finding the incentive and ability to create an effective teacher education program. By 1971 it had grown from 33 faculty members to 69; from 695 undergraduate majors to 1,371; from 489 to 1,277 graduate students; and in outside funding sources, from $717,305 to $4,595,552.

The school's 1971-72 annual report stated: "In terms of diversity, no graduate school in the country has more minority graduate students (over 150). Three of our five assistant and associate deans are members of minorities. All new faculty positions at the school of education are being filled by minority or women candidates."

News Analysis

The department has undergone tremendous growth and improvement, but since 1972 the department has been experiencing a steady decline in funding. In that year, the School of Education's budget was $4,611,016. By 1976 the budget had been cut to $1,813,278. Its 1977 budget did improve to $2,841,505.

Soft monies are federal and state funds given to the UMass school of Education for varied extension programs for teacher training or experience. Most of these were programs for part of the year that began in the early seventies and have been terminated.

The Center for Urban Education (CUE) at the School of Education is a research and training center focusing on education in urban areas. The primary goal of the center is to "implement programs for real change in urban education — in the public schools, urban communities, and in institutions for higher education."

The Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program (CUE-TEP) is the only soft money program that has not been terminated, but whose budget has seen much cutting. The undergraduate enrollment of CUE-TEP has dropped from 180 to the present 65.

CUE houses CUE-TEP. CUE's budget experienced a monetary peak of $795,770 in 1974, and declined to $20,000 by 1977. CUE director Barbara Love, said, "There is not the kind of commitment to funding the school of education as there was five years ago."

Samuel Henry, director of CUE-TEP said, "I think there is a lack of national leadership. The leadership problem in the school has become critical."

CUE is designed and structured under five basic principals, with which the students are trained. These are combatting racism, multi-urban thrust, urban community development; new design for higher education, and the hope factor. These principals are specificly designed to identify the needs of the urban education environment and youth and to find the best means to effectively deal with those needs.

Grand jury indicts three UM students

A federal grand jury in Boston Thursday brought down two separate indictments against three UMass students arrested in last month's federal cocaine raid on campus involving five men.

David A. Bruno, 21, a Cance House resident and David Hellman, 21, also of Cance House, were each indicted on possession of cocaine with intent to distribute.

Joseph Cooper, 21, of Moore House, Richard A. Kaufman, 32, of Brighton, John Peterson, 27, of Boston, and Hellman were also indicted on separate counts of possession with intent to distribute.

Cooper, Hellman, and Kaufman were also indicted on a third charge of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute.

The indictments came as a surprise to the five men who were told of the grand jury's decision on Friday when they appeared in Springfield federal court for their probable cause hearing scheduled for that date.

Newspaper occupiers will not be suspended

The Student Judiciary and the UMass administration are no longer drawing up orders of suspension in light of the end of the recent occupation of the Collegian offices.

"All is stopped," Clerk of Courts Barry M. Benson said yesterday. "Our ultimate objective was to have them leave the building," he said.

Dean of Students William F. Field said his office is no longer interested in recommending suspension, but said other groups may request discipline.

"All the grounds have disappeared at this point," he said.

O'Neill won't run for Brooke's senate seat

BOSTON [AP] — Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd announced yesterday he will run for reelection rather than challenge Republican Edward W. Brooke for his Senate seat in the U.S. Senate.

The decision cleared the way for U.S. Rep. Paul Tsongas to enter the expanding Democratic senatorial field. Sources close to Tsongas told The Associated Press that the Lowell Democrat plans to announce his candidacy Thursday.

O'Neil said he had been considering a Senate bid on and off for six months and started pondering it seriously when she claimed, recent polls suggested he could beat Brooke.

"But it's an entirely different thing to just think about it and to have it in your heart to run," the 33-year-old O'Neill said. "I prefer the executive way of doing things to the legislative way, and the roots of myself and my wife are in Massachusetts."

O'Neill said his father, U.S. House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr. had grown increasingly enthusiastic about the prospect of a Senate bid.

"At the end of last week he was acting more as a father than as a political advisor," O'Neill laughed.

O'Neill said he had promised Tsongas yesterday to give him any help he could if Tsongas decided to run. But O'Neill quickly added that his offer of help is available to any Democrat and that he was not endorsing any particular candidate at this point.

O'Neill said he had told Gov. Michael S. Dukakis of his decision Saturday night and Dukakis seemed "very happy" at retaining him as a running mate.

O'Neill, who had a taste of legislative life as a member of the Massachusetts House, is completing his first term as lieutenant governor in the Dukakis administration. He admitted he has his eye on taking over Dukakis' job some day, remarking that he has dreamed of being governor since boyhood.

With O'Neill shunning the senatorial race, the Democratic field for the moment is narrowed to state Reps. Elaine Noble and James M. Connolly, both from Boston, and John Pierce Lynch, Hampden County's registrar of deeds.

On the Republican side, Brooke faces a challenge from conservative television commentator Avi Nelson of Brookline.

Connolly breathes easy with less competition

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Although he might not admit it, somewhere in this state this morning state Rep. Michael J. Connolly, D-Boston, is breathing easier.

And for good reason.

Rep. Michael J. Connolly

Contrary to news reports which broke last Friday morning, Connolly is not going to have to worry about facing Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd in the race for Edward W. Brooke's U.S. Senate seat. O'Neill yesterday announced he will not attempt a challenge of Brooke.

Last Friday afternoon Connolly arrived at UMass just in time to express his outrage at that morning's news that had O'Neill barely an eyelash away from becoming a candidate.

"I'm outraged and insulted," Connolly said, "by the arrogance of the fellow. It makes you wonder about the strain of loyalty, seeing how he made a commitment to support Elaine Noble a month ago.

"Apparently, those words meant nothing to him."

Connolly was referring to the fact O'Neill had come out more than a month ago in support of Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Boston, in her bid for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate race.

According to Connolly, his campaign is just starting to come together, both in terms of financial and philosophical support from other state democrats.

He has also garnered the support of some 24 state representatives; prize catch among them was Charles Flaherty of Cambridge, the former chairman of the influential Democratic State Committee.

Connolly Friday said he will concentrate his attack on Brooke on those issues where he deems Brooke extremely vulnerable, such as energy, Pentagon spending and his use of national issues like the Panama Canal treaty as political fodder.

"Energy is the number one issue facing everyone in this country today, it cuts across every other concern we may have. Brooke has vascillated with the issue of nuclear power, which is characteristic of him. He just doesn't provide the leadership necessary."

Connolly, who is against the use of nuclear power, said he will be talking to members of the Clamshell Alliance for a possible alliance.

"And then," Connolly said, "we'll go up and take on Meldrim Thomson (Governor of New Hampshire) on his own turf."

Before Connolly can plan his actual head-to-head challenge of Brooke, he must weave his way through the crowding field of other democratic candidates and possible-candidates.

His greatest challenge in that respect will come from Noble, to whom Connolly has already conceded the vote of the far-left.

According to Connolly, it will come down to winning the heavily democratic cities and doing well in the suburbs. And then there is money. Lots of it.

"We will raise between $100,000 and $150,000 for the primary, and if we win that, then we will have to raise about $250,000 between Sept. 19 and Nov. 7 for television spots and advertising. Winning the democratic primary could be worth about a quarter of a million dollars."

Feminists open office ending 12-day siege

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

Chanting, singing, and led by two women carrying a purple banner reading "Women United Against Oppression," 68 of the women who had barricaded themselves in the Collegian offices over 12 days charged out just after noon Friday into the glare of television lights and a crowd of about 150 supporters, press, Collegian staffers, plainclothes police officers and the curious.

The women, who first barricaded the doors May 1 at 3:30 a.m., were protesting coverage, placement and amount of space of women's news in the Collegian. There were no men in the office at any time during the 12 days, according to Dorothy Howard, one of the women who occupied the office.

The occupiers left after an agreement was reached between the women and the Collegian and the women to set up a chancellor's fact-finding commission to work over the summer and make recommendation to the Collegian on women's news. The commission's recommendations will not be binding on either party.

"The purpose of this commission is essentially to step back and de-politicize the situation, which has been very heated," said William A. Sundstrom, Collegian editor-in-chief, at a press conference Friday morning.

Julie E. Melrose, women's editor of the Collegian and leader of the protest, said if the women's community did not agree with the commission's recommendations, "we will take further action, to be determined by the community over the summer."

"This was only round one," Howard said at a rally after the women left the offices. Howard will also be a member of the chancellor's commission.

The commission will be made up of two students from the Collegian, two students from the women's occupation community, and three faculty members. Three administrators will also sit on the commission, but they will not vote.

After leaving the office, the women gathered supporters, making a group of about 200, and marched through the Campus Center, behind Hasbrouck, past the campus pond, and stopped at the side stairs of the Student Union Building.

There they sang, chanted, and listened to speakers. The rally broke up after about 15 minutes.

Melrose said there was a core of about 50 women in the office at any time during the 12 days. "Some people stayed pretty much the whole time," she said. The women had food sent in and many left the office for other responsibilities, according to Melrose.

Maureen Carney, a student who was a member of the women's occupation community, said the community had "mixed opinions" on the agreement. "Everyone was really disappointed that they didn't get the demands," she said. "But, facing the facts, it's a sexist world, and women don't have the power other people do."

"We realized that the occupation wasn't doing us any good. It was just the old Collegian office at that point. But we feel we've done something; we've raised the issue."

About 20 Collegian staffers walked into the office as soon as the women left. At that time the office was in a "state of dissaray," said Sundstrom, although there was no serious damage. "Some minor items were misplaced," he said. Some equipment in the office was also damaged.

"I'll certainly be glad to be home," said Howard. "But I'll miss this women's space. It's been a very special world for all of us, and we hope to be re-creating it many places."

"It's wonderful to be back in the office," said Sundstrom. "It makes it a lot easier to put out the paper, and the Collegian has become a home-away-from-home for a lot of staffers."

Shakespeare in review

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

"As You Like It"

Much to the audience's surprise, the National Shakespeare Company chose to set "As You Like It" in the zany flower children era of 1968. This unusual interpretation took some getting used to, but as the play progressed, it revealed a definitely better than average performance.

The semi-contemporary version of the play was effective and the 60's tone made the play easy to relate to. The regular traditional script was excellently spiced with the 60's theme.

The play opens in the palace of Duke Frederick, who exiles his niece Rosalind. She decides to go to the forest to find her father Duke senior who has already been exiled. Her cousin and dear friend Celia decides to accompany Rosalind. The two women disguise themselves, Rosalind as a boy named Gaymede in order to safely travel through the forest.

Orlando, a good-looking immodest young man, meets Rosalind before she is exiled, and is immediately infatuated with her. He then takes to the forest to find Rosalind.

Orlando is fooled by Rosalind's disguise. He tells her of his love and agrees to let Gaymede cure him of his love. The two actors played this game-like sequence very well.

Alison Edwards as Rosalind and Richard Browne as Orlando were the strength and focus of the play. They were sensitive to the complexities of their characters, and portrayed their love game superbly.

"Othello"

The company's other performance, "Othello", was gripping and moving. The actors were able to capture the audience with their expert and superior acting ability. This performance also revealed the versatility of the actors. It was a truly superior production.

"Othello", one of Shakespeare's masterful tragedies, is the story of a moor who comes to Venice and falls in love with Desdemona, the Duke's daughter. Othello is an alien to Venice.

In this production the alien quality was represented by a leather armband laced all the way up the actor's arm. The armband was used very effectively. In the outset of the play Desdemona and Othello perform a ballet-like, romantic ritual with the armband as a bond, eternally enforcing their love.

Iago, Othello's friend, and Desdemona's hand maiden Emilia's husband is the villain of the play. Through his scheming and trickery, he convinces Othello that Desdemona has been unfaithful to him. Iago, played by Marc Weishaus, portrayed his character with such power and excellence that he managed to captivate the audience's complete attention more and more as the play progressed.

Othello played by Jonathan Lutz, did not give his character enough strength in the outset of the play, but as the play progressed his character came to life.

Nancy Hammill as Desdemona gave the character a poetic elegance. She masterfully expressed her pain and anguish when she was alienated by her husband Othello.

Repertory reviewed

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Feminist Repertory Company Saturday night performed an evening of two one-act plays to a capacity audience in Hampden Dining Commons.

"The Haunting of Terry J." and "All Girl Band" concerned the struggles of women living in a new era, and confronted such issues as lesbian identity and combatting traditional women's roles.

According to Eileen Steward, music coordinator for the plays, the Amherst Feminist Repertory Company is "committed to presenting original women's plays on a regular basis. Our goal is to provide a place for women to express themselves artistically through writing, acting, and technical work in theatre, in a non-competitive, supportive atmosphere," she said.

According to Judy Katz, director of "The Haunting of Terry J.", the Company started in 1975 when a group of women involved with Everywoman's Center started meeting regularly to practice improvisational techniques in theatre.

Katz said rehearsals have been going on since January for the two plays performed Saturday. "The Haunting of Terry J." concerned a lesbian women's discovery of her own heterosexual tendencies and the subsequent exorcism of these tendencies out of her body by a witch and a group of friends. In the play lesbian attitudes were dominant in the society and heterosexual feelings were frowned upon. V. Alexis Taylor did a fine job of playing the haunted, stricken Terry J. and Eileen Stewart's portrayal of the good natured witch was particularly funny.

The outstanding feature of "All Girl Band" was the country music which provided an outlet for the tremendous energy and enthusiasm of the actresses and musicians. The fiddling of Barbara Stack, Marie Hartwell, and Cathey Dooley complemented the story of three Southern women on a tour of the North, discovering their female identities and common experiences.

Amherst town meeting to try to fix budget

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

There may be more procedural volleying tonight in the form of attempted budget cuts when the annual Amherst Town Meeting swings into its sixth session.

The Amherst Taxpayers Association has spent the previous five sessions attempting to lop off enough of the proposed $14.5 million town budget to rid the town of the expected $1.50 increase on the present tax rate of $44.50 per $1,000 assessed valuation.

The goal, according to members of the taxpayers association, is a four percent across-the-board cut in most of the budget sections.

Tonight the meeting members are scheduled to begin action on the remaining budget items included in Article 16, the article mandating the town to adopt a comprehensive budget.

These items include the proposed property management budget, the indebtedness account and the Water and Sewer funds. Also remaining on the agenda for Article 16 is the public education budget. However, with the exception of certain funds for school transportation, Town Meeting must raise the full amount requested by the school committee, or be subject to possible legal action.

The total public education budget recommended by the school committee is $6,402,517.

The proposed $86,270 property management budget represents a 59.3 percent increase over last year's appropriation of $54,166. Much of this proposed increase is included in a $35,594 request for the first full year's operation of the Bangs Community Center.

The projected total indebtedness for fiscal year 1979 is $910,893, an increase of $78,335 over last year's appropriation.

Last Thursday night Town Meeting passed a Public Works budget ($848,039) and a Planning and Code Enforcement budget ($155,194). Both figures were below the budgets recommended by the Finance Committee, but above the bottom-line cuts desired by the taxpayers association.

World leaders to meet at arms control talks

UNITED NATIONS [AP] — The Soviet Union brings its anti-neutron bomb campaign to a new forum next week — a special session of the U.N. General Assembly called to debate international disarmament.

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim is billing the session as "the most prestigious gathering of world leaders in 20 years," with 13 heads of state or government and 19 foreign ministers listed among 121 speakers in the session. It is to run from May 23 to June 28.

The last U.N. meeting to attract that kind of roster was in 1960 when then-Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev of the Soviet Union addressed the assembly. The late Soviet leader drew a goodly number of world leaders to the vaulted chamber for a debate punctuated by his pounding his desk with a shoe to protest a speaker's remark.

This time the Russians are sending Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, who is expected to hold parallel talks on a U.S.-Soviet strategic arms limitation pact with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance. The meeting would follow up SALT talks in Moscow last month at which both sides reported some progress.

U.N. officials hope President Carter will come to make the third United Nations speech of his 16-month-old presidency and tackle the disarmament issue which was a major plank in his campaign platform. The United States has requested a spot on the speakers' list but has not said who will address the forum.

The Soviets, signaling the thrust of Gromyko's U.N. mission, circulated to assembly members copies of an April 25 speech in Moscow by President Leonid I. Brezhnev. He said Russia was "making an active effort to prevent development of a new and most inhuman weapon, the neutron bomb."

The American-developed neutron weapon is a small nuclear warhead intended for placement on Lance missiles and artillery shells in NATO nations to counter the numerical superiority of Soviet-led Warsaw Pact forces.

New Anglican sect to be organized

SALEM [AP[ — Conservative Episcopalians upset by the ordination of women and homosexuals have begun laying the groundwork in New England for a formal breakaway.

About 200 dissidents met this weekend at St. Peter's Church in Salem to discuss procedures for organizing a New England diocese of the Anglican Church of North America. Last fall, that national group began to split off from the mainline Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Clinton Macy, rector of St. Peter's, said the group "laid down formal rules for calling a diocesan synod but no date was set."

He said 10 New England Episcopal Church groups already have affiliated with the new Anglican sect, including five in New Hampshire, three in Massachusetts and one each in Connecticut and Vermont.

The priest said delegates came from those 10 groups as well as many other churches still within the Episcopal fold but sympathetic to the Anglican movement.

The principle speaker Saturday was Anglican Bishop C. Dale David Doren of Pittsburgh, who is overseeing the New England branch of the movement until it becomes stronger.

Bishop Doren said the Anglicans were appealing for support not only from "high church" Episcopalians, the segment of the church closest to its Roman Catholic roots, but from other denominations, including the Eastern Orthodox and Polish National Catholic churches.

Congress to debate Middle East jet sales

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter learns this week whether he has enough congressional support for his plan to sell jet fighters to Isreal, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

The first big test will be in the Senate today with floor debate and then a vote on a resolution to block the sale. If Carter wins on the Senate floor, the congressional fight will end since opponents need majorities in both the Senate and House to block the arms sales.

If Carter loses in the Senate, he still will have a chance to prevail in the House. The House International Relations Committee is scheduled to vote tomorrow on a resolution to reject the sales.

The Carter administration proposes to sell 60 F-15 fighters to Saudi Arabia, 50 F-5E fighter-bombers to Egypt and 15 F-15s and 75 F-16 fighter-bombers to Israel. The administration also has announced its willingness to sell 20 additional warplanes to Israel later as a conciliatory gesture to win support for the three-way sale.

The sale does not require congressional approval. But if both houses vote to reject it within 30 days of its submission, the sale cannot go through. Carter submitted the plan on April 28.

After the arms sales debate, the Senate is expected to turn tomorrow to another hotly controversial item, a labor bill which opponents intend to try to kill with a filibuster.

Supporters of the measure say it will make it easier for workers to organize into unions while opponents contend it will lead to compulsory unionism.

House-Senate energy conferees are scheduled to meet on tomorrow and may vote on a proposal to drop price controls on natural gas by 1985.

If the plan is approved, it would clear away a major block to resolving the year-long deadlock over energy legislation.

Other matters due for action on Capitol Hill this week include:

—Final Senate committee action on President Carter's proposal to lift the arms embargo on Turkey. The Foreign Relations Committee rejected the plan to lift the embargo on an 8 to 4 vote last week. But since a quorum wasn't present, the vote wasn't official and will be taken again Monday morning. Aides said they expect no change in the result.

—Work is continuing on the congressional budget resolution with House and Senate conferees trying to reach agreement on defense and education spending.

—The House may take up a bill that would set aside 100 million acres of federal lands in Alaska for parks, wildlife refuges and wilderness. Conservationists say the bill is the last chance to save Alaska's untouched scenic treasures while opponents of the measure argue it would cripple economic development of the state by cutting off access to oil.

Assault in the library

To the Editor:

A very disturbing incident occurred in the UMass library this past Sat. night, May 13, which I strongly feel ought to be brought to the attention of this University.

No one should have to be afraid to study in the library, at any time or on any floor, yet a woman was attacked on one of the stairwells. The Campus Police were called. One policeman came for about five minutes, took the woman away, and claimed that he couldn't stay because there was a lack of police on duty. The attacker was still somewhere in the library. I find their lack of action and responsibility contemptible. The library was only open for one more hour. Is that too much to ask, to have some security for one hour?

The police are supposed to be here for protection and for preventing such incidents from happening. I think it important that people around this university be made aware of these things and not allow our "security" system to get away with irresponsibility and doing a half-assed job.

Censorship distorts

To the Editor:

Yesterday, as I was browsing through the progressive newsstand in the Student Union, I picked up one of the books on lesbianism. There were three women behind the desk who immediately, simultaneously and brusquely told me to put the book back — not to touch it — that it was not to be touched, perused or purchased by any men. As I put the book back I noticed a sign on that shelf to the same effect.

My reaction was, at the very least, puzzlement. Not only is there a question of first amendment rights involved here, but also an issue of tactics. Even if such material is written by lesbians and for lesbians, it should be recognized that much of the social and political oppression of gay people has resulted from a lack of understanding about the reality of honest, complete and loving relationships between two people of the same gender. What better way is there to understand and accept such relationships than to be involved, through reading, in a dialogue among people involved in them?

I recognize the sensitivity to the possibility of being exploited by straights and derided as being strange or dangerous, a la Anita Bryant. But such discriminatory censorship merely intensifies the mystification and distorted interpretations often ascribed to lesbian relationships.

It is important that those involved know that these comments are made from a position of criticism-self-criticism in solidarity with those who work with the newsstand collective. I appreciate the critical contribution they are making by providing easy access to a broad range of excellent progressive literature and I hope more students will frequent the newsstand.

In pursuit of an education

To the Editor:

Ever since the whipping I received in third grade for spitting at the teacher who had the habit of violently pulling the ears of her male students, for reasons only Freud could have uncovered, the importance many attach to public education has been a great puzzle to me. Doing time at UMass has only exacerbated the mystery.

I can understand the place in society a technical education has because it trains one for a useful task such as, for example, planning and building bridges, the ability to communicate with computers or the skill to repair sinks, TV sets and cars. Business schools have a useful purpose too. They provide the opportunity for one to learn how to efficiently practice usury, or subtle techniques of tax evasion, or advanced principles of huckstering, etc. But a liberal arts education teaches nothing resembling a skill; unless one believes it a skill to haggle over what the meaning of life is or isn't, or whether man qua man is a poet or an ape or some unknowable admixture of the two.

Having spent a number of years in the pursuit of an education in the humanities, I've come to the unfortunate conclusion that not only is it sublimely pointless but it amounts to nothing more than an education in snobbery. The slob who can quote Ovid and whistle Beethoven's Ninth [without missing a note] somehow comes to think this makes him a being superior to the slob who drinks Rolling Rock beer, belches and cheers the Bruins.

I don't deny that reading Shakespeare, the Bible, Shaw and volume after volume of the classics, unabridged of course, is spiritually uplifting and rewarding. What troubles me is the attitude so common among liberal arts students and teachers that, by virtue of their having chosen to plow through the works of Proust rather than dissecting a frog [because it smacks too closely of practical knowledge], they are entitled to exclusive property rights in the empyrean. But, of course, there are no talents involved in studying great works of literature or philosophy; in creating them, yes, but this can't be taught. Shakespeare certainly never attended anything even faintly like today's high schools and colleges.

How is one to justify the expense of a liberal arts education? The School of Liberal Arts appears to be a refuge for loathsome misfits who suffer the illusion they are maestri whose celestial talents need only be tapped. One must acknowledge the truth of what many social observers have theorized. The proliferation of higher education is a result of the middle classes emulating the airs and vanity of the leisure class.

Thanks to the Physical Plant

To the Editor:

We would like to acknowledge the outstanding performance of the Physical Plant workers who cleaned up after the "Southwest explosion" on Tuesday night. Good times sometimes leave a mess we often don't think about, and the great time we all had Tuesday night left quite a mountain of trash. Few of us that were there would have expected the trash to be picked up in one day. But thanks to the diligent workers of the Physical Plant the monumental task of cleaning up the aftermath of Southwest's impromptu party was accomplished by Wednesday afternoon.

Thanks a lot for a job well done!

Facts excluded from AP story

To the Editor:

On Thursday [5-11] you published an Associated Press story [p. 19] complete with eye catching border and front page reference. The attention given to an otherwise obscure allergic reaction of one woman to the sauce in McDonald's "Big Mac" is not an example of "objective news coverage" but clearly a display of the prevalent anti-capitalist mentality in the media.

The fact glossed over by the article is that all of us are allergic to one thing or another to some degree. A very few people have extremely adverse reactions to things which are completely harmless to everyone else. Gum tragacanth, the culprit in this attack, has been used for centuries and is in fact one of the most "natural" food products — being derived from the root of a mountain shrub.

Another fact excluded from the AP story, but which can be found in the original letter from the Canadian doctors to the New England Journal of Medicine, is that the woman in question had a previous history of similar allergic reactions. Why was this omitted? Clearly the story would not have had the intended impact of fermenting distrust of "Big Business" if the reader realized that this is just an insignificant "one in millions" anomaly.

I am sure that I and many millions of other will continue to enjoy McDonald's "Big Mac's" — after all, how do you think they became so big if not by satisfying consumer demand?

Drew Crane

Separate but unequal

To the Editor:

Women's News, etc. — Separate But Unequal

To posit in our age of late 20the century American liberalism we need to become more aware of minority issues, is not at all a fallacy. It is certainly necessary for us to understand the minority's pleas with hopes that in future generations their pleas become reality. But to declare forcefully that women demand 4-ad-free pages of women's news is in effect demanding that which it is promoting to dissuade. To retain the position of separateness that minorities may have now in their plea for mass recognition will promote not only awareness but also, separateness. The mode that they are utilizing to cause awareness [i.e., separate pages], will create separation and as a result the cultivation of hostilities and alienation.

Why they should be ad-free I don't know. To me it connotes inequality. They are striving for homogeneity and equality in society's world of opportunities, not separation and inequality. And to demand 4 ad-free pages abounds with inequality and separation, which is the very antithesis to their objectives. History has proven that separation does not promote understaading, good will, and harmony; but in fact it is generations in time and the blending of ideas that is needed to establish understanding and equality.

Flag treated carelessly

To the Editor:

The red, white and blue flag that symbolizes everything these United States stand for, deserves more consideration than it has had flying outside the Whitmore Administration building. Old Glory should not be used as a decorative item for the concrete fortress.

Since transferring to this university in the fall of '77, I have witnessed the stars and stripes flying day and night, rain and shine. Is it ever taken down? Any boy scout will tell you that the symbol of freedom, our flag, is taken down during inclement weather. I learned that the flag is raised in the morning and is brought down before nightfall as a child.

Whoever has made the policy for the use of our flag should reevaluate the purpose of the flag and then reevaluate the purposes he is using it for. Our country's flag is not to be displayed indiscriminantly.

Constructive hindsight

jay martus

People often talk about wishing they could start all over again or go back to better times. There are events in my life that could have been handled better if what I knew now could have been employed then.

Part of me believes that things could have been different. We would not know what we know now, or believe in what we believe now, if we didn't have past experiences to shape and mold our present perceptions. Only accepting that what we've done in the past has led us to where we are now do arguments about going back to do it over again lose their currency and value.

UMass as an institution believes in using hindsight as a way to resolve present problems, only to find that hindsight on old problems and beliefs fit the past and don't go very far in rectifying current dilemmas. This is not meant to belittle the benefits of historical realities, it merely suggests that they should be used in their proper perspective and not as the new doctrine.

It is an historical truth that, in academics at the university, the demand for liberal arts curriculum is a relatively recent phenomenon. At the point of tremendous enrollment pressure of the turbulent 60's, students demanded the expansion of the liberal arts. As a result of the enrollment pressure the university hired and tenured large amounts of faculty members in the liberal arts discipline.

> UMass as an institution believes in using hindsight as a way to resolve present problems, only to find that hindsight on old problems and beliefs fit the past and don't go very far in correcting current dilemmas.

Then came the seventies. People began to graduate with English degrees etc. and found employment as insurance sales people or waitresses, or found no employment at all.

Students at this point in time came into the university and began demanding more applied curriculum. In response, the university strengthened areas such as business and engineering. Faculty were recruited to fill the departments where educational planners projected the greatest demands would occur. Again people were tenured in large numbers to provide them with job security and the institution with stable staffing.

Unfortunately the educational planners goofed again. Students came in numbers far greater than the supply realignment could accommodate. There were business professors, but not in the areas of the greatest demand, and certainly not enough. The same phenomenon occurred in engineering and other applied fields like Hotel Restaurant and Travel Administration.

At this same juncture in time the English department, with its large and mostly tenured faculty, experienced declining enrollments along with many other liberal arts disciplines. The applied disciplines had large demands in areas that had not been planned for. It was far too late to reverse the tenure track and the university's inflexibility in meeting student academic demands reared its ugly head.

A reactionary state legislature, and a governor whose greatest claim to fame is his sweaters in blizzards, did much to further the problems to the point of crisis.

In the next few years enrollment will probably shift again. What are we doing to help change our pattern and what have we learned from experience? The university Accreditation Self Study, which is charged with evaluating the past ten years and projecting the trends of the next ten years, is once again using rose-colored hindsight and anticipating shifts which would align demand with the institutions inflexible academic resources. Once again educational planners are predicting the evaporation of our problems. Will they ever learn?

If only people had the attitude of my roommate's German Shepherd, Thor, who is easy going, doesn't make the same mistake twice, and learns from past experience, they would probably be as easy to live with and as carefree as he is.

Tenant's rights

By STEVE BAUMOHL

Remember that security deposit you gave your landlord? Want to know more about your rights as a tenant to receive interest and to have it returned upon moving out? Well here goes ...

The law regarding security deposits for rental of housing is primarily found in Massachusetts General Laws Chapter 186, section 15b. (A new section 15b will take effect on Sept. 1, 1978).

Security Deposits

A security deposit includes all money received by your landlord in advance beyond your monthly rent, including a "key" deposit. The total amount cannot lawfully exceed two months rent. (This article does not deal with deposits given to landlords or rental agents as a "deposit on the apartment" before you decide to move in, in order to "hold" the apartment).

Your Right to Interest

Your landlord is required to pay you 5 percent interest on a deposit which is "held" for one year or longer. The interest should be paid at the end of each year of your tenancy, and when you move out for any fraction of a year after the first year. If the landlord does not hold your deposit for a year or more no interest payment is required. For example, if you have a 12 month lease and leave after 9 months and the landlord returns the deposit no interest is required. If, however, the landlord does not return the deposit when you move out but waits until the 12 month lease expires (i.e. the deposit is held for one year or longer) then the landlord owes you interest.

Getting Your Deposit Back

Your landlord is required within 30 days after your tenancy ends, to return the deposit, or any balance after lawful deductions (discussed below) plus any interest owed. The 30 day period begins "after your tenancy ends." Thus if you have a 12 month lease and leave after 9 months (hopefully having sublet for the last three months) your landlord is required to return the deposit 30 days after the twelve months is up — not when you leave. However, if the landlord rents the apartment to someone else for the last three months, s-he must return the deposit within 30 days after you leave.

Deductions

Your landlord may properly deduct for (1) any damage to the premises caused by you (or any person on the premises with your knowledge or consent); (2) any unpaid rent; (3) expenses of re-renting the premises if you move out before the lease is up. No deduction may be made for reasonable wear and tear. A landlord cannot properly charge for cleaning and washing or painting an apartment unless there was some special damage (i.e. writing on walls, burnt candle wax on floor, premise left really filthy, etc.). Costs of "freshening up" or painting the place for the next tenanct should not be charged to you. Reasonable wear and tear to the place is expected and is a business expense cost for the landlord.

Nor may a landlord deduct from your deposit any "legal fees" such as for notices to quit or whatever. If deductions are made from your deposit, you are entitled to receive an itemized list of what the deductions are for. The list must specifically indicate the nature of any repair necessary to correct your damage and the actual or estimated cost of the repair. The itemized list of deductions must be given to you within 30 days after your tenancy ends (see above).

Moving Out

Try calling your landlord or the managing agent, to arrange for an inspection of the apartment when you're moving out. At the inspection, try to have other people there who could be a witness in court if that becomes necessary. Try to have your landlord give you a signed written inspection report. If you don't get something in writing, you may try sending a signed letter (keep a copy) confirming the results of the inspection report.

If you disagree with any damage that's being attributed to you, disagree in writing. Hopefully, you have a signed list of the condition of the apartment when you moved in. When you do finally move out, make sure you leave the apartment in the best possible condition. Also make sure you let the landlord know where to send your deposit.

If the Landlord Violates Your Rights

The law imposes a penalty on landlords who fail to comply with its security deposit obligations. A landlord who fails to return the deposit or the proper balance after lawful deductions (with an itemized list) is liable to the tenant for double damages. That is, you are entitled to twice the amount which lawfully should have been returned within the 30 day period. Getting it however, may be another matter.

Start by writing your landlord a letter explaining the situation and demanding your money — (including double damages). State if you don't get a satisfactory response by a certain date you will be "forced to take legal action." If you don't get a satisfactory response (it is your choice whether to persist in demanding double damages) you can sue the landlord. (You could have sued before the letter but it's generally best to ask first and try to avoid time in court).

If the amount of the deposit which has been improperly withheld is $400 or less you may sue your landlord in The Small Claims Court ("double" damage in excess of $400 may be awarded). Small Claims has its advantages — you don't need a lawyer, it is quick and inexpensive. Small Claims clerks are generally very helpful. Small Claims however has its disadvantages: if you lose you cannot appeal but the defendant landlord may appeal to Superior Court for a jury trial.

If your basic claim (without double damage) is more than $400 you can forget about the full amount and sue in Small Claims for $400 (plus hopefully an award of double damages) or bring a lawsuit in the District Civil Court Session for the full amount and double damages. If you want to bring a regular civil lawsuit, as a practical matter (though not technically required) you need a lawyer. Also these regular civil lawsuits may take quite a long time (i.e. years) to complete.

An additional option is to also bring a lawsuit under the Consumer Protection Act, Mass. General Laws, Chapter 93A for your landlord's unfair and deceptive acts. Chapter 93A provides for an award of triple damages and payment of your attorney's fees if you win. You should speak to a lawyer about such an action.

Student Legal Services gives free legal advice and representation to UMass-Amherst students. # Your Birthday

MONDAY, MAY 15

Born today, you possess a keen, analytical mind, but tend to use it too much criticizing the work of others and not enough in furthering your own progress. Quick to see and define a fault, you must become equally quick to find causes of and solutions to the faults. Don't short change others who depend upon you for an accurate assessment of their value.

Though your career may take you into areas of joint enterprise, when you are at home, you choose leisure time activities that will isolate you from others. You will have to take care that in pursuing hobbies you do not alienate your own family. Children could be denied your guidance.

You have an innate ability to influence others' opinions with very little effort. Because of this, you should never want for support in your own activities; all you have to do is suggest that another might back you up and, almost without a second thought, he will.

Others born on this date: Joseph Cotton, actor, Anna Maria Alberghetti, noted singer.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, MAY 16

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) -- Encourage the young to emulate you. You have much to offer the immediate family today.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Remedies are all around you; all you have to do is select one that fits.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) -- You need expert judgment of human nature if you are to pull today's chestnuts out of the fire.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) -- A need for financial backing may lead you down strange pathways early in the day. Be calm.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- Team-work is essential for the progress indicated for today. Make friends with enemies.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Analyze your situation carefully. Changes may not be best just now.

Hottest game on foot

By GARDE WELLS
and RUSS SMITH
Collegian buddies

Fireball III took place Friday evening on Wope field before an unofficial crowd of between 125-500 people, mostly students: the numbers varying according to whom one listened to.

The contest consisted of eight students, mostly from the third floor of Cashin, a dorm located in elitist Sylvan area.

For all intents and purposes, there was no accountable winner as the participants felt that the game itself was the important aspect of the contest and not the final score — which by the way was 4-2. Or was it 5-3? Oh well ...

The UMass police stopped by before the REAL contest — in the preliminary warmup game (which ended in a 1-1 tie). It was not a social call however as they were checking out the legality (permit-wise) of the field. The feature contest began following the go signal.

The game also served to unofficially break the sex barriers as Karen Micheals possibly could have been the first female to participate in the sport. No one could remember if any female previously had participated in earlier campus encounters.

The ball, made up of rags intertwined with hangers and, after being soaked in kerosene for a couple of days, is then ignited and used as a soccer ball.

Since it is estimated the temperature can reach almost 4,000 degrees, no one player can hog the show — thus keeping the game a team-effort sport.

The only casualties reported in the hot-foot contest were some burnt fingers and melted Niki sneakers (since the ball has a habit of igniting what it comes in contact with occasionally).

"This is the first game I've ever played in, and I love it," said Miss Micheals, a sophomore co-ed. "This is our competition to Southwest (in reference to Cement City's bonfire celebration night last week)."

Fireball-III: It could be the start of something big. A game where no one loses — and everyone comes out a winner.

More tomorrow in column ...

field, resulted in a record 2:14.7. Laurie Wolf, suffering from a back strain incurred last Thursday, managed to crack the 2:20 barrier with a 2:19.9, good for fifth.

Speaking of the latter, discomfort is no stranger to sophomore Diana Sealy, who didn't spread herself too thin by running six races in the course of the day.

Sealy ran two 220's, where she finished second (26.6) in the final to Maine's double winner Patti Holcomb; three 440's, two in the open division, where she finished second again (58.0) after misjudging a New Hampshire runner's strength; and a 110 yard leg on the 4x110 relay, which again was second, despite running its best time of the year 50.8 second effort.

Bad handoffs plaqued that relay, as Martin ran away from second leg runner Linda Stillman, then ran past anchor runner Sealy. Still, Springfield had to run a school record 49.3 to win.

Martin returned to burn a 57.5 quarter leg in the mile relay, the fastest 440 turned in on the day, but it was not enough to hold off Springfield, which won the last event of the day. UMass still ran its best time (4:05) of the year.

Lynn, Fisk key Bosox victory

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. [UPI] — Fred Lynn cracked a three-run homer and Carlton Fisk added a solo blast and a run-scoring double yesterday to power the Boston Red Sox to a 6-2 triumph over the Minnesota Twins and their 10th victory in their last 11 games.

Lynn's fifth-inning Home came on the first pitch by reliever Mac Scarce after the Red Sox had chased Paul Thormodsgard, 1-5, on a bunt single by Jerry Remy, a single by Carl Yastrzemski and Fisk's RBI double.

Boston added a run in the ninth inning on back-to-back doubles by Jim Rice and Yastrzemski.

Fisk hit a 425-foot homer over the center-field fence in the second inning for Boston's first run, but the Twins moved ahead 2-1 in the third on solo homers by Willie Norwood and Mike Cubbage.

Dennis Eckersley went 6 2-3 innings to gain his third victory in four decisions with Tom Burgmeier hurling the last 2 1-3 innings to get his third save.

Gazelles win three, reaffirm no. 1 status

By JIMBO GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The women's lacrosse team did little this weekend but reaffirm their No. 1 status in New England as they won three games and lost none in the New England Lacrosse District Tournament at Smith College.

The Stickers beat two club association teams, Hampshire 1, 12-2, and West-Chester 8-5, and also beat the New England Collegiate number one All-Star team 8-6, in the closest game for them of the weekend.

Although the games did nothing to affect the National seedings, UMass coach Frank Garahan said that the tournament was good for the team.

"These games were good for our heads in that everybody got to play and everybody did well," he said.

UMass won the games without the services of Gayle Hutchinson in the last two games because of a strained ankle muscle, and without Cari Nickerson in the last game, who didn't show up on Sunday.

There were some interesting trends that developed over the weekend. In the first game win over Hampshire 1, Nickerson recorded six assists while Jean Hackett scored five goals and Judy Kennedy scored twice. Most of the offensive players got either goals or assists as UMass won 12-2. Fiona McAllister, Kathy Gipps, Sue Kibling, and Allyson Toney each scored while Julie Hall, Deb Hartley, and defenseman Grace Martinelli each assisted.

In the second game on Saturday, UMass on Saturday, UMass beat a team composed of the best collegiate players in New England. Six of the players came from New Hampshire, two from Northeastern, and others came from Vermont, Brown, Dartmouth, and Boston State in what appeared to be a revenge grudge match. It was a rough checking, spirited game with players on both sides being hit.

On paper, the All-Stars appeared to have a big advantage, UMass won with some great goaltending by Robin Jennings. She played perhaps her finest game of the year making 14 saves, many in close, as she held the All-Stars down for most of the game.

UMass jumped to a 6-3 lead at half as Hall assisted on the first four goals scored by four different players. Kennedy, who had three goals in the game, scored the fifth and sixth goals for the halftime lead.

UMass controlled the second half early and Hackett scored the seventh goal. The clinching goal came from Martinelli's first goal of the season as she took a pass from Laura O'Neil, stickhandled in and let go a shot that eluded UNH's premier goalier Suzanne Rousseaw.

The All-Stars controlled the final portion of the game but Jennings kept UMass alive with her saves.

On Sunday, UMass beat WestChester association club 8-5 again with Jennings having a fine day. She made nine saves and continually thwarted attempts by Anne Keating, one of the most well known players in the country.

Kennedy led the team with four goals while McAllister had two assists. With UMass in the lead, WestChester attempted a comeback with a late rally but scores by Martinelli (the second of the season) and Kennedy, who picked up a loose ball and went in along, clinched the win.

"The fact that Grace was scoring was not luck", said Garahan. "That's a sign of a good team as their forwards were playing defense so our defense played attack. I was very pleased to see that because that quality takes time to develop."

One of the main factors in UMass' success all year has been the ability to control ground ball and they did it again in each of the games.

The tournament was the last scheduled play for UMass before they travel to Virginia for the Nationals. Garahan is hoping to, in the meanwhile, schedule some games with Yale to keep the team sharp.

The three wins up UMass' record to 15-0-2.

Trackmen host NE's, take 6th

By KEVIN MCCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

For some four years in a UMass track uniform are over. But for others a Minutemen track career has just begun.

In yesterday's New England Track Championship staged on the Llewelyn Derby Track, UMass finished the sixth out of a field of 41. Of the 14 competitors who were responsible for the Minutemen final tally, seven were first year men.

"The majority of our scorers today were freshmen," stated assistant coach Arnie Morse. "It's safe to say we're very optimistic about our future."

After competition of the two day program comprised of 17 events, Northeastern convincingly defended its championship title with a runaway effort of 115½ points. Yankee Conference winner UConn was the runner up with 74. Boston University was third at 57, Brown was fourth with 48, and Ivy Leaguer Dartmouth was fifth with 39. UMass placed in six events and finished with 36.

The highest Minutemen showing was achieved by junior Kevin McCusker in the steeplechase. McCusker survived eight laps of barriers and a water jump to post a runner up time of 9:04.2. Bruce Bickford of Northeastern won the event with a New England record time of 8:41.9. Peter Descamps presented UMass with the only event it could place two people in, as he earned fifth position with a time of 9:21.1.

Leading the youth of UMass was Dan Kelly, who was the only Minutemen performer who captured honors in two different events. In his first New England's he garnered fifth in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles, and anchored the fourth place effort of the mile relay team. Filling in for Joe Martens who didn't feel well after running the 400 meter dash, Kelly registered the second fastest UMass relay leg behind Mickey Baugh's lead-off effort of 49.1.

The 440 relay crew initiated the UMass scoring with fourth place honors in the first running event of the cool and extremely windy afternoon. The quartet of Rich Cady, John Cremmen, Garry Herman and Don Trunfio recorded a time of 42.71 on the fully electronic timer, newly installed this year. That placed them 1.38 seconds behind the New England champion, BU.

Javelin thrower Paul Derby continued his streak of consistent first year performances as he captured fourth place in that event.

Freshman Don Dowden capped off his first Spring in a college uniform with a third place showing in the high jump. His leap over the bar at 6'7" represented the only field event points UMass could salvage from the two days of competition. Pat Augeri from UConn defended his title in that event with a jump of 6'11".

Glen Cohen from BU, a Great Britain olympian in the games at Montreal, left no doubts in the minds of the spectators and competitors who the best 400 meter man is in New England. Last year's champ Frank Mortimer from Northeastern and runner-up Martens from UMass were entered in the race, but Cohen ran with a cool confidence that denied their presence. After the first 200 the outcome was decided, as the soft spoken olympian strided to a two length victory. His time of 46.95 was more than a second ahead of runner up Mortimer. Osman Lake of Brown narrowly missed second place by .04 seconds as he finished third in 48.08. Martens in his last Derby Track performance shared the fourth slot in 48.32.

The final event of the two day festivities was the mile relay. Boston University, relying on the strength of Cohen who was competing in his third race of the day, raced to a 3:15.08 victory. UMass did well to finish fourth as half of their regular relay group was unable to compete. Senior Rich Thompson substituted for ailing Mark Healy, who earlier failed to qualify for the finals of the 400 meter intermediate hurdles because of a hamstring pull. Senior Fran O'Keefe concluded his UMass tranck career as the second leg of the relay squad which registered a time of 3:19:50.

Late drive pays off

Batmen in ECAC tourney

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

Moments before Friday's game with Amherst College the official announcement was made. UMass had been selected to compete in the ECAC baseball tournament along with three of New Englands top rated teams, Holy Cross, Fairfield, and Providence.

What has seemed an impossible task midway through the season had suddenly become a reality. In the final poll UMass was rated above Boston College and UMaine by virtue of a late season drive (11 of their 14) and a superior record against Div. 1 teams.

With the announcement as an inspiration UMass took two of their three weekend games, defeating Amherst 5-3, and splitting Sunday's doubleheader against Sienna College, winning the first 6-1 and bowing 7-1 in the finale.

Adding to the days excitement of the Minutemen making the tourney was the news that Amherst's 6'7'' Bill Swiacki was pitching.

The Amherst righthander recently became a cause celebre after being drafted by the N.F.L.'s New York Giants as a tight end. But he is considered even better at baseball. Drafted out of high school and again last year by the Red Sox, Swiacki entered the game with an 8-0 record and 1.04 ERA. As if that wasn't enough he was also batting .430.

Half the stands were filled with pro scouts watching his every move, but by the end of the game the Minutemen reminded the scouts they had some talent of their own.

UMass wasted no time admiring Swiacki, as shortstop Ed Skribiski doubled on his first pitch. Moments later Mike McEvilly put a Swiacki fastball in orbit for a two run home run. It was the first homer Swiacki had given up all year. But they were not through yet, the Minutemen proceded to label the Amherst star for 13 hits and his first loss. This all paved the way for UMass's Tom Nigro was gained his sixth win.

Nigro pitched a strong game allowing only three unearned runs in the first inning. He went on to hurl 4 hit shut out ball over the final 8 innings, to win his fourth straight decision.

As they had done against Amherst, the Minutemen opened the doubleheader against Siena with authority. Ed Skribiski hit a leadoff home run off Sienna's Kevin Nevins, who earlier in the year had gone 12 innings to beat UMass. As fate would have it, this time Nevins could not last beyond the first inning. Mike McEvilly drilled a ball off his pitching hand and he was unable to continue.

UMass immediately peppered Siennas relief pitcher for 8 hits in the next three innings to build an insurmountable 6-1 lead. Among the main contributors were Mike Stockley with 3 RBI's (on a single and SF) and Leo Kalinowski with two runs scored and an RBI (with a triple and single).

Doug Welenc was on form once again, cruising his way to his 8th win against three defeats. He allowed six hits in his seven innings of work.

In the second half of the twin bill Sienna rudely treated UMass pitchers Chris Collins and Ed Lewis, for seven runs and eight hits including back to back homeruns.

This weekend's warm winds blew good news in UMass' direction, as the baseball team was invited to compete in the ECAC tournament, joining Holy Cross, Fairfield and Providence. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Snow, Martin lead trackwomen

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Just when things got rolling for the UMass women's track team, the season had to go and end.

In the first ever New England Intercollegiate Track and Field Championships for Women held at Springfield College Saturday, the Minutewomen set two school records and turned in their usual batch of PR's — personal best times.

Despite their fine performances, though, the Minutewomen fell victim to a powerful, first year Springfield squad, 151 to 93. Vermont was third with 73 points, just edging UMaine which had 70.

"I was really impressed with Springfield," said UMass Coach Charlotte Lettis. "They had the numbers, the depth and the talent, but I'm really proud of our whole team — we did well, too."

In the record-breakers department were two familiar names. Freshman Karen Snow broke the javelin record for no less than the second time, while sophomore Cindi Martin did likewise to the 880 yard standard.

Snow overcame a case of the jitters to record six throws over 119', with the record breaking toss of 126'4'' good for third overall in the competition. Oregon transfer Dianne Crawford also threw her best of the year, 112'7'' to eke out fourth by a scant four inches. Both had been steadily increasing their distances as the season progressed.

"For people like them, the New England season is just too short," said Lettis. "It's too bad the season ends so soon. They, and others on the team, were really beginning to come along."

Eastern finalist Martin ran a strong first lap to leave the field behind, luckily, since the last 110 yards of her race did not quite equal the pace of the first 770. Still, her individual effort, without the aid of a strong

"a personal note"

Since this is the last piece of literature that I'll be writing for a few months, I wouldn't feel right without providing you with the results of my annual close-out sale that took place last week.

Most of the items were sold rather quickly, others took a while to get rid of, and because some of my items weren't even bid upon, I have decided to leave them to the people whom I feel deserve them the most. Here are the results of the first annual "Cleanout Clearance."

Item No. 1: One thirty-four ounce flame tempered baseball bat with a six-inch hole in the "meat" of the bat. New owner — Lyman Bostock of the California Angels, who stated upon receiving the bat "I need something to get me out of this slump, so I'm turning to religion. Now I got myself a holy bat".

Item No. 2: Doubleheader. One gallon of Geritol and a spoon. New owner — Gordie Howe of the New England Whalers. Comment — "this stuff is great. I think I'll turn on Mark and Marty to this excellent headstash. By the way, do you have a larger spoon?"

Item No. 3: Four in one special. One slightly used razor blade, a mirror with "Coke adds life" imprinted in it, one miniature sterling silver spoon, and one J.J. Cale record album. New owner — Leon Spinks, the WBA heavyweight champion of the world. Comment — "for an extra sawbuck will you throw in that roachclip?"

Item No. 4: Two parts. One six-ounce bottle of bowling ball polish and an Earl Anthony autograph bowling ball. New owner — Joe Garagiola, commentator for NBC sports. Comment — "so what if I'm not a bowler. This polish stuff is great!"

Item 5: One award for 1977 Sportscaster of the Year. New owner — Rollie Jacobs — sports commentator for Channel 22. Comment — "and tonight it was Amherst Regional over Chicopee Tech in girls kield hockey by a 3-2 score. Northampton and Enfield Prep battled to a 164-162 final in men's chess. And in other action, the Dallas Cowboys defeated the Denver Broncos in the Super Bowl by a 27-10 margin."

Item No. 6: One copy of the movie Take the Money and Run. New owner — Earl Campbell of the Houston Oilers. Comment — "no comment".

Item No. 7: One six-pack of Ivory soap. New owners — the women who occupied the Collegian office in their ridiculous "sit-in". Comment "On behalf of all us feminists, we resent the fact that we didn't get exactly what we wanted. But we need the soap to "clean up our act" if you know what I mean. It was pretty grundgy in there!"

Item No. 8: Four football jerseys, all size extra large. New owners — the women who were guarding the doors of the Collegian office during their week-long protest. Comment — "Geez, now we can infiltrate the NFL training camps and no one will ever be able to tell the difference between us and the players."

Item No. 9: One case of Raid pest remover. New owner — the Collegian office. Comment — "the next time some group tries to seize our office from us we'll be ready for them."

The sale was a complete success. The money that was raised will be donated to two world-renowned charities; the Mac Herron fund for missing persons and the Bobby Knight charity for coaches who realize that winning isn't everything.

Anyway, this just about wraps up this columnist's work for a while. I would just like to use this space to thank the people who aided me in my quest to who knows where; David Rodman and Michael Smollens, the ex-editor (and soon to be ex-editor) of the sports department, Steve Zack, Rich Eckel, and Russ Smith, fellow columnists and friends, Loren Lane, Bill Owades, and Gary Kovner, good friends who helped me think up things to write about, Eric "Mario Andretti" Weihrauch, the "other guy" in my adventures to racetracks and card tournaments, Jimmy "the Greek" Snyder, for detailing what it's like to be a professional oddsmaker (my career ambition), The School of Business Administration, for giving me so much work that I still don't know which way is up, and most of all, to the readers of my column. Thank you and have a pleasant summer.

A berth in the national tournament in Omaha will be at stake today when the UMass softball team, undefeated in four Eastern Regional playoff games, takes on Westchester State in a two out of three series for the Eastern championship today in Allentown, PA.

Last night's scheduled game between the two teams was postponed due to rain, and will be made up at noon today, before the teams, both unbeaten in playoff competition, go head to head in a 7:00 p.m. twinbill.

The story in the Regionals, as it has been all season, is the outstanding pitching and fine all-around play of sophomore standout Sue Peters. Peters has been the winning pitcher in three of the four Minutewomen victories, including winning both ends of last Thursday's doubleheader.

UMass won two vital weekend games to advance to the finals. On Friday night, Kathy O'Connell was the winning hurler, as she shut out East Stroudsberg, 7-0.

Coach Dianne Thompson's charges jumped out in front early, scoring five runs in the initial frame. Consecutive singles by Cheryl Meliones, Jen Parker and Peters plated two runs, and after a sacrifice and a walk, Carol Bruce, who has been outstanding on the plate, singled home two more. Bruce is batting .400 in the tourney, and has driven home a team high five runs.

East Stroudsberg was again the opponent on Saturday, and the Minutewomen prevailed again, as Peters picked up the win in the relief of Kathy O'Connell, holding on, 4-3. Four errors allowed UMass to score two unearned runs, and key RBI hits by Rhonda McManus and Carol Bruce sparked the win.

Trivial Tid-bids Dept. — Base running has played an important part in the Minutewomen's success. They stole four bases on Friday, and Meliones and Parker turned a double steal into a key run on Saturday. UMass has yet to commit an error ...

Hispanic Community Protest School Board Decision

Nummo News Staff

AMHERST — On Tuesday May 9, the Hispanic Community and supporters assembled in the Commons carrying signs of protest to the School Board's decision to reject their proposal for Cultural Enrichment in the Marks Meadow School.

The Hispanic Parent's Coordinating Group presented their proposal to the Amherst School Committee on April 11, 1978; the proposal was defeated by a 4 to 1 vote. After the decision members of the Hispanic Community began doing research to present to the School Board at their May 9 meeting.

Those assembled in the Commons peacefully marched to the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School where the School Board meeting was being held. At that meeting supporters of the proposal cited the Board for violations of Affirmative Action, and stated that the proposal would not cost the District any money because it would be totally funded by the School of Education and other sources. The program is optional for students and would consist of 1 period per day.

The School Board had stated that it would not discuss their decision at that time. Further action by the Board is pending their evaluation of the material presented to them at the May 9 meeting by supporters of the proposal.

Assata in Alderson

On April 13, 1978, Assata Shakur was taken to the Federal Prison for Women at Alderson, West Virginia. This was the culmination of a process started when Assata was convicted in New Jersey in March 1977. She was taken very briefly to Clinton, New Jersey's women's prison, but the state quickly decided Clinton was not "secure" enough to hold her, and she was transferred to Yardville, a men's facility. In June, 1977, she was taken back to New York, where she was held at Rikers Island, until charges against her in Brooklyn and Manhattan were finally all dismissed in March, 1978. While all this was going on, her lawyers were in and out of federal court in Trenton and New York, fighting the legality of her transfer to federal custody. Assata has no federal charges or convictions of any kind. This battle is still going on.

For five years, the state has tried to prove that Assata is a wanton terrorist. Although they succeeded in securing a conviction in one of the most racist trials in recent history, they have failed. When she was arrested on the New Jersey Turnpike on May 2, 1973, charges and indictments were piled on her, so that it seemed that she was responsible for any act that could be connected with the Black Liberation Army. Instead, what followed was series of acquittals, dismissals and dropped charges:

- Dec., 1973, bank robbery; Southern District; mistrial.
- Dec., 1973; bank robbery retrial; Southern District; acquittal.
- Aug., 1974; attempted murder; Manhattan Supreme; dismissal.
- Dec., 1975; armed robbery, kidnap; Brooklyn Supreme; acquittal.
- Jan., 1976; bank robbery; Eastern District; acquittal.
- Jan., 1978• kidnap, assault; Brooklyn Supreme; dropped.
- Mar., 1978; attempted robbery; Manhattan Supreme; dropped.

All this has exposed the coordinated racist efforts mounted by Cointelpro, the media, the courts, and the prisons against her, as it has been mounted against Sundiata Acoli and countless others who have resisted the brutality and genocidal policies of the United States government.

Throughout this period, one of the primary objectives of the state's attack against Assata was to break her will. At times this took the form of solitary confinement in all-men's prisons and basement dungeons. Now it takes the form of her incarceration in Davis Hall, the maximum security unity (MSU) at Alderson.

Assata's will has in no way been broken. She remains strong and determined to continue the struggle wherever she is. We on the outside have two major immediate tasks. One is to win her return to New Jersey. The other is to overturn her conviction.

For over two years now, Sundiata Acoli has been locked in the Management Control Unit (MCU) at Trenton State Prison. It is no coincidence that this is where he is held. As a Black revolutionary, he is seen as a threat to the "security" of the prison system. He and others like him in prisons across the country are put in behavior modification units designed not only to control such prisoners but to make them conform to the narrowest standards of white, middle-class America.

Benny Martinez Faces The Electric Chair in New York

The State's highest court, the Court of Appeals, has recently struck down mandatory death sentences for all but one type of offense — murder committed by a prison inmate serving a life sentence. Because Benny Martinez is being accused of a murder he did not commit, his case will be used to reinstate the death penalty in New York. The trial is scheduled for Dutchess County in Poughkeepsie.

All-out support is needed. The Benny Martinez Defense Committee is hoping to mobilize as many people as possible to travel to Poughkeepsie when the trial begins. Cars will be needed. Anyone who can volunteer a car or driving service, please call: 579-5351, 681-555, 691-1846, or WA 6-7412.

Who is Benny Martinez? What is this case about? Why is it important to support him?

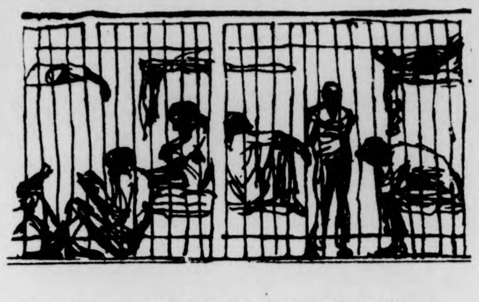
Benny Martinez is an inmate of Green Haven Prison, an active member of Puente de Unidad Latina (P.U.L.) a Latin organization that has done consistant constructive work on prisoners' issues, Black-Puerto Rican unity, and multi-national outreach. Because of Benny's militant activism, he has always been under close scrunity of the prson administration; and recently has been the target of violent harrassment.

On Friday, April 29, 1977, around 3 p.m. a spontaneous scuffle took place in the crowded hallway of the prison (specifically — Hallway B of G and H Block) which resulted in the alleged stabbing of one guard and one inmate. The guard was immediately rushed to a hospital. The inmate was left in the corner of the hall profusely bleeding while correction officers rushed in to close the sector and immobilize whatever action was taking place.

Benny Martinez was one of several inmates caught in the hallway enclosure. He was pounced on by several guards and forced to the floor and handcuffed. The injured inmate was later taken to the prison hospital where he died. However, it was not until August 2 that Benny was indicted for 1st degree murder of the inmate and 1st degree assault on the guard.

But this case is not solely about the April 29th incident alone. The April 29th incident is the culmination of many of the ills of the prison — the over-crowding of the institution; the inadequate medical care and much less of health concern; hushed up prison brutalities; administrative coercion in using informers; behavior modification programs; use of drugs; arbitrary punitive actions against prisoners — especially political prisoners; inhumane conditions in segregation; questionable substances used in prison food; almost wageless slave labor; high prices in the commissary; confiscating of reading material (political books and newspapers), general violations of human rights, and the heavy existence of the KKK.



Benny was the only inmate indicted in the alleged stabbing although there were 300 inmates in the hallway when the eruption occurred. He has also been a prime target for harrassment by prison authorities. On September 5, right after a lawyer's visit, his legal papers were taken away and a rectal search was demanded. Because Benny righteously fought for his papers and also resisted the rectal search, he was beaten to the ground and stomped on by over a dozen guards. His arms, legs, ribs, and jaw were badly bruised,but not outside doctor was allowed to see him. His injured finger was sewn up but the stitches were removed too early, not allowing the incision to adhese, causing infection. He was beaten again at the hospital with a rubber hose. Finally after a court order, his own doctor was allowed to see him 3½ weeks later. Benny was held in segregation until February of this year. He is now in population.

To safeguardBenny from further brutalities, a strong, vocal-visible support must be organized from both outside and inside the prison. Funds for legal defense must also be raised. All checks must be written out to George Nieves. Anyone wishing to help or work with the Benny Martinez Defense Committee in any way please contact: G.I. Jose Paris at Lincoln Hospital, 579-5351; George Che Nieves, at Legal Aid Society, 881 Gerard Ave., Bronx, N.Y. 10451; Yuri Kochiyama at WA 6-7412. Send all contributions to: Benny Martinez Defense Committee, c-o Midnight Special-George Che Nieves, GPO Box 1772, New York, New York 10001.

It is no coincidence either that almost all the prisoners in MCU are Black. Behavior modification programs have been used most often against Black and other third world prisoners who were either arrested because of their stands against the present U.S. system, or who have become politically active and articulate since being inside.

Last spring we were part of a group of people who supported MCU prisoners who were protesting being forced to wear jumpsuits whenever they left the tier. At first some 70 men were expected to share three jumpsuits — which was like forcing them to wear each other's underwear. For nearly eight months, many of the men refused to wear the jumpsuits, and so were denied the right to see their visitors, see a doctor, or even go to the parole board. No jumpsuits, no leaving the tier.

It was not until a group of us demonstrated outside the prison, and then went to the Commissioner's office to demand that each man have his own jumpsuit, that the state authorities began to listen. Soon after this, the jumpsuits were finally issued.

Prison authorities quickly found another form of harassment. The men in MCU are not allowed even the slave wage jobs available in most American prisons. In the early days they were given a minimal amount of money to enable them to buy their necessities in the Commissary. Last fall, the allowance was simply stopped. This means that unless they have either family or friends who can help, they have no money at all.

Such tactics are all part of the pattern. The hope is that eventually prisoners will be crushed, or will lash out and give the authorities an excuse for further torture or even murder.

Understanding this, when we know of a flagrant violation of human rights, we must try to remove the violation of human rights, to correct the abuse. We also understand that a piecemeal approach can't affect the more basic issue, the existence of MCU. MCU is not just like another maximum security unit within a New Jersey maximum-security prison. Its very existence is a violation of human rights.

This is why we are calling for the closing of the Management Control Unit. And for this we need your active participation. We are starting a campaign which will be neither short nor easy. We have a leaflet which explains what MCU is, and postcards addressed to the Governor of New Jersey, which call for its abolition. When we have a large number signed, we will send them to the Governor to achieve maximum impact. We want in this way to show New Jersey authorities that people in that state and elsewhere know what is going on in MCU, and that we will not just sit by.

If you can help us get postcards out, please call us. Also, we want to meet with committees, organizations, schools and individuals who would like to work with us in any way in this campaign. We will be making contact with some of you, especially in New Jersey. But please don't wait to hear from us. We definitely want to hear from you.

This campaign can be an important step in breaking the conspiracy of silence about MCU and behavior modification in New Jersey and elsewhere. These flagrant abuses of human rights must be stopped.

AFTERSHOCKS

The state of New Jersey continue to coordinate its attacks on those who support Assata. The most serious of those at present is against Lennox Hinds, national director of the National Conference of Black Lawyers. Hinds is a leading legal spokesperson for the Black community in its resistance to institutionalized racism and violence. He now faces disciplinary charges for having questioned the judicial temperament and racial sensitivity of Theodore Appleby, the judge in Assata's New Jersey trial. Appleby's conduct during the trial demonstrated beyond any doubt that to him the maintenance of a white supremist system was a far greater priority than a fair trial. The actions of the New Jersey Bar Association against Lennox Hinds are an attempt to silence those who speak out against racism as well as once again demonstrating to the Black community that to speak the truth about (in)justice in the U.S. means all kinds of trouble.

We have an obligation to let the State know it can't pick off Lennox Hinds. He has taken action in Federal court to challenge the Bar Association's attack. We are asking you to write to David M. Foley, Middlesex County Ethics Committee, P.O. Box 1963, 850 Georges Roads, New Brunswick, New Jersey 08902, telling him that Lennox Hinds does not stand alone. Also, the State knows that the cost of defending Hinds comes out of already scarce N.C.B.L. resources. Please send what you can to N.C.B.L., 126 West 119th Street, New York 10026.

And a situation for the "if it weren't real and dangerous it would be funny" department. The juror who escaped from sequestration during Assata's trial is suing counsel William Kunstler for slander and asking $250,000 in damages because he stated publicly that the juror had gone out to get liquor. It seems the jury is more concerned with people knowing he drinks than he is about people knowing that he is a racist.

The five supporters arrested in New Brunswick and charged with conducting an illegal lottery were found guilty of conspiracy to conduct an illegal lottery and fined $50 each.

WHO WE ARE

When Zayd Shakur was murdered, Assata Shakur was wounded and Sundiata Acoli was captured in May, 1973, people all over the country came to their defense. In the New York-New Jersey area, groups formed in the third world, women's and anti-imperialist movements. To understand the history of the Committee, it is important to remember that we did not come together until three years later, in early 1976. The work we have done and continue to do would not have been possible without the support and consciousness raised by other groups and individuals who understood the significance of the case from the beginning.

The Assata Shakur Defense Committee formed when Assata asked members of the Shoshana-Pat Swinton Defense Committee to work on her New Jersey trial, which was then scheduled to begin in April, 1976. (Shoshana-Pat Swinton is a white revolutionary woman who was charged with conspiracy to bomb government buildings in protest against the war in Indochina in 1969. Captured in 1975, she won acquittal with a political trial strategy. Her defense committee drew heavily on the anti-war and women's movements.) Members of the Shoshana-Pat Swinton Defense Committee were joined by others committed to the support of the Black liberation movement and became the Assata Shakur Defnese Committee.

Time and struggle have shown us how different our analyses and levels of experience were. We ranged from vague support of political activists in trouble to a commitment to the Black liberation and national liberation movements as the leading force of socialist revolution in this country. Some of us had never before dealt with our racism in our political work. Differences such as these and our liberalism in challenging them have been a major obstacle to building principles while support for the Black liberation movement.

As we began active work on the New Jersey case, we began writing newsletters, staging benefits and forums, organizing demonstrations and doing press work. We also met with other defense groups and the lawyers. The trial was postponed until September, 1976, as a strategy was beginning to develop. In August, the chief trial counsel was found suddenly and mysteriously dead in his apartment. Thousands of pages of legal papers in the case were held in "safekeeping" by the police. Finally a new defense team formed and the trial was set for January, 1977.

Throughout our speaking, writing and meeting we faced fundamental questions as white people supporting the Black liberation movement and looking to build a white revolutionary movement. These included:

- Taking Black leadership without making the racist error of irresponsible dependency, i.e., have we the courage to make mistakes?
- Fighting our skin-class privilege that leads us to avoid open support for armed struggle.
- Organizing support for Assata and Sundiata on a principled basis as prisoners of war in a war of liberation, not as isolated individuals being deprived of their human rights.
- Organizing support in a way that nurtures progressive consciousness and organization and does not become part of a closed "white left" circle.
- Keeping ourselves in the picture and in struggle, not as "exceptional" white revolutionaries with no growing to do.

As the case went to trial, there was more visible support for Assata. At the same time the State stepped up its attack, especially through the media. Sundiata, serving life plus 30 years in Trenton State Prison, was charged with attempted escape and felony murder in an incident in which another prisoner was killed by a guard. Though these charges have never been prosecuted, the press kindled hysteria by printing front-page stories saying he was breaking out to free Assata. Throughout Assata's trial, misinformation and racist lies were fed to people who depended on the press. Collusion between the judge, prosecutor and sheriff's office came to light, as well as evidence of jury tampering in this trial as there was in Sundiata's trial. Yet some of us maintained a naive faith in the possibility of "reaching" this all-white jury, given the weakness of the government's case. It would have been hard to win in that court under any conditions, but it was a major error to fight the case as a "criminal" trial. Everybody, certainly all the jurors, knew that it was Assata's politics that were on trial, not who shot first on the New Jersey Turnpike on May 2, 1973.

Since her conviction, the struggle in support of Assata and Sundiata has had several angles:

- Assata's remaining cases in New York (now all dismissed)
- Assata's confinement in isolation cells of men's prisons in New Jersey and in the Federal Penitentiary in Alderson, West Va.
- Sundiata's confinement in the behavior modification Management Control Unit (MCU) of Trenton State Prison.
- Appeals in both cases.
- Exposure of FBI Cointelpro campaigns against the Black movement beginning in the 1960's and continuing today. The Committee is smaller. Several members of the committee left in the fall because of political disagreements; some continue to work on the case. There are also several other groups doing ongoing work on behalf of Assata, Sundiata or both. Those of us who are white must deal with building a movement among our own people. We must place our support for Assata and Sundiata in the context of our support for the Black liberation movement, other national liberation struggles and prisoners of war.

As part of this building process, we expect to become part of a broad coalition forming to raise the issue of human rights for political prisoners, to struggle for them, and to strengthen the ties between the prison movement and other progressive and revolutionary movements in this country.

Attica Massacre continues

On Sunday, April 2, 1978, Attica Brother Dalou Asahi (Mariano Gonzalez) and two policemen died in a gun battle on the streets of Brooklyn. Attica Brother Jomo Joka Omowale (Eric Thompson) was arrested eight blocks away after a car accident. He was then brutally beaten by police in the ambulance on the way to the hospital. At the hospital, he was treated for a broken jaw, other head injuries, and a bullet wound.

We do not know exactly what happened in Brooklyn on April 2, 1978, and we may never know. So far we only know the police versions, and like the stories of slashed throats at Attica in 1971, time will show that these accounts are self-serving and untrue.

We know that the gunfire in Brooklyn was the same gunfire that killed the men in Attica in September, 1971 — and the same gunfire that has killed political leaders like Malcolm X and George Jackson and common folks like Clifford Glover and Randolph Evans.

The police and the press have seized upon this accident to unleash a flood of vicious racist and reactionary propaganda. They have concocted slanderous lies about the two brothers and their families. They have attempted to rewrite the history of the Attica uprising and prosecution. They have suggested that such incidents can be prevented by providing stiffer sentences, abolishing parole, and reinstating the death penalty. They have issued ugly slurs on entire communities and stirred up the vilest racist fears and hatreds.

We know that Dalou and Jomo are not the "hoodlums" and "terrorists" described in the daily press. We know them as strong, militant, selfless, intelligent, highly respected and beloved leaders. They have enriched the lives of many people; they have been teachers; they have made us laugh and cry.

We know that the "books" are not closed on Attica. We know that Dacajeweiah is still in prison for a crime that he did not commit. We know that Jomo now faces a mockery of a murder trial after having been immediately convicted in the press. We know that scores of families have been bereaved by Attica, and that hundreds of people walk the streets with wounds that Attica created that will never heal.

We know that we are part of the struggle for which Dalou died. One of our immediate tasks is to continue this struggle by giving Jomo the support he will need in the days ahead. In this way their struggle — our struggle — will be victorious.

MONEY

We need money. As the support work for Assata moves to another stage, fund-raising takes on different purposes but does not diminish in importance.

In the past two years, money raised by this committee has been spent in the following way:

Phone and other office expenses — 5 percent; stamps, mailings, printing — 32 percent; fund-raising — 10 percent; legal work (xeroxing, jury work, experts) — 34 percent; Assata — personal and subscriptions — 7 percent; bus rental and political work — 8 percent; miscellaneous 4 percent — Total 100 percent

We are committed to help finance the struggle to free Assata. Immediate needs are monies to pay travel expenses for people who visit Assata at Alderson, and for her commissary needs. We also need funds to help other forms of support. It costs us over $200 just to get this Bulletin to you, and we need to reach many more people. Mailings, leaflets, posters, telephone bills, etc. All these are expensive. We need money. You have it. Please send what you can.

WHAT THE PLO WANTS:

The political program of the Palestine National Council [PNC] is the authoritative statement of the PLO's current goals. It defines the strategic framework within which the PLO leadership makes its tactical decisions.

The current program was adopted by an overwhelming vote at the last session of the PNC, which met March 12 to 20, 1977. Meeting irregularly, the PNC is the parliamentary body of the PLO and includes close to 300 delegates from all the armed resistance groups, mass organizations and institutions, as well as representatives of each of the Palestinian exile communities.

[Preamble]

Proceeding from the basis of the Palestinian National Charter and the resolutions adopted by previous National Council sessions:

Determined to preserve the political resolutions and gains achieved by the PLO on the Arab and international levels during the period following the 12th session of the PNC;

Having studied and discussed the latest developments in the Palestine issue and the various activities of the Palestine revolution under the leadership of the PLO on the internal, Arab and international levels;

Having also considered the Arab and international situations;

Asserting its support for the Palestinian national struggle and the realization of its goals in all international and Arab forums and meetings;

The Palestine National Council affirms the following:

[The 15 Points]

1. The PNC affirms that the Palestine problem is the essence and origin of the Arab-Zionist conflict. UN Security Council Resolution 242 ignores the Palestinian people and its inalienable rights in its homeland. Therefore the PNC reaffirms its rejection both of this resolution and of dealings based upon this resolution on the Arab and international levels.

2. The PNC affirms the PLO's determination to continue the armed struggle and its concomitant forms of political and mass struggle to achieve the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian Arab people.

3. The PNC affirms that the struggle in the occupied territories in all its military, political and mass forms constitutes the central link in its program of struggle. On this basis, the PLO strives to escalate the armed struggle in the occupied territories, to escalate all forms of concomitant struggle, and to provide all forms of material and moral support to our masses in the occupied territories so that they can escalate the struggle, and to provide all forms of material and moral support to our masses in the occupied territories so that they can escalate the struggle and increase their resolve to persevere, defeat and liquidate the occupation.

4. The PNC affirms the PLO's stand which rejects all forms of American capitulationist settlements and all liquidationist plans. The Council endorses the PLO's determination to oppose and defeat any settlements which would be achieved at the expense of our people's inalienable national rights.

To all churches and concerned people

To churches and concerned people:

With the Name of God, Most Gracious, Most Merciful As-Salaam alaikum (God's Peace be unto you)

This letter is being sent to you in hopes that you will join us in our sincere effort to rid our communities of a problematic concern, images that attempt to portray the Divine.

In the call to remove all racial effects from worship (churches, etc.) we ask two logical and sensible questions:

1. What would happen if White people were to sit in churches for 300 years with the image of a Black man on the cross? What would this do to their minds?

2. What happens to the little White boy who sits and looks at the purported Image of Divine in his white skin? What does this do to his mind as he sees an image of himself?

Bilalians (Blacks) should no longer tolerate worshipping images and symbols set up as God. These very blatant forms of racism produce superiority complexes in Caucasians and inferiority complexes in Bilalians. Black images do the reverse.

It is written in the Holy Bible, Exodus 20:3-5: "Thou shalt have no other Gods before Me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in the Heaven above, or that is in the Earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shall not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them."

Likewise, as it is written in the Holy Quran Sura 3, Ayat 64:

> Say: "O People
> Of the Book! come > to common terms
> As between us and you:
> That we worship
> None but God;
> That we associate
> No partners with Him;
> That we erect not,
> From among ourselves,
> Lords and patrons
> Other than God."
> If then they turn back,
> Say ye: "Bear .. witness
> That we (at least)
> Are Muslims (bowing > To God's will)."

If you and your congregation would like to join us in this very worthy cause and effort, you may do so by writing a statement to the effect that you will comply to remove all images from your church, etc. If you would further grant us permission to print your statement of compliance in our newspaper BILALIAN NEWS, we feel this would further serve to show others how varying denominations can still unite together in the common cause of TRUTH.

You may send your response to the:

Committee for the Removal of All Images that Attempt to Portray the Divine Masjid Muhammad No. 13; P.O. Box 398, Highland Station; 495 Union Street; Springfield, MA 01109.

Thank you for your cooperation in this very crucial, necessary and valid mission

Your Brother in service to God,
Karim Abdel-Shakur, Resident Eman

RACIAL DIVINITIES

Emam Wallace D. Muhammad

Were Christ Jesus to be put in Black skin, wooly hair, blunt Bilalian or Afro features widely published and revered and given the same place in worship occupied by the white traditional image, what would be the effect on the World after several generations of identifying the Black racial image as the (Supernatural) God in the flesh?

When a little Bilalian (Black or Afro American) child and a little "White" child sits side-by-side during church service, before the Christ in the flesh, on the cross or otherwise displayed, what is the psychological effect on these two (2) children?

Let the new World return to the pure divine commandment. Make no images. Support our plea that Americans abandon racial effects in the worship of God. Thank You

A Message of Concern to the American People

Emam W. D. Muhammad

The Plot

The so-called "Christian" religion was sneaked in on the "Gentiles" by the Jacobites who were looking for political dominance and material dominance over the world. They gave them such a religion so that they would worship a deliverer in their own image, but a deliverer tied to the Jacobite people.

The Message

You can't live in America without hearing the message. The message of white supremacy is everywhere. You are conscious that Jesus is in a white body even if you don't go to church. Every American knows that Jesus is put into a "white" image by church society. Every American knows that the apostles and saints and angels are made "white" by church society.

You don't have to be consciously aware of it as "white" Jesus or as a "white" religion. The very fact that our minds exist in this environment is enough to make that image and those messages go into our subconscious and cripple Bilalian ("black") peoples' ability to lift themselves up out of inferiority. It also keeps Caucasian peoples' minds in a false world by making them unable to see their real worth and value as human beings apart from their physical skin color.

The Problem

We are not to see God in a racial image.

As long as "white" (Caucasian) people think that their physical white image is in the world as the image of God, and as long as non-white people see and know that the Caucasian image is in the world as the physical image of God, there will be no real coming together and no peaceful meeting of the minds of Caucasians and non-Caucasians. The strongest wedge between non-Caucasians and Caucasians is a Caucasian image of God on the cross.

What would happen to the minds of the Caucasian people if Bilalian ("black") people would suddenly come into power with their mentality, with their love for their religion? What would happen if nappy-headed, black Jesuses were put all over their land and throughout their homes and in all of their churches? What would happen to their minds over a period of three hundred years if they were kept coming to churches and seeing our image on the cross, seeing our image as their redeemer, seeing our image as their prophets, their apostles, their angels?

They would be reduced to inferiority because the image before them of the supreme model of superiority would be "black" and not "white."

The Solution

REMOVE ALL RACIAL EFFECTS FROM WORSHIP.

The Challenge

Survival, a play written and performed by the South African Theater Workshop '71 appeared at Mount Holyoke College in mid April. The actors feel that the main intent of the play is not to interpret South African life in a political but rather in an artistic content. Through the use of native songs, dances, and preaching they intended to convey what ordinary Black South Africans think and feel.

The four actors in the play, Themba Ntinga, Selaelo Dan Maredi, Fana Kehana, and Seth Sibanda in the opening of the play present themselves as four criminals in a South African prison. During the course of the play they act different roles, while they show why they are criminals and incarcerated. The underlying social system that guides life in South Africa is Apartheid, a system of segregation, exploitation,aand oppression of all non-whites. All four had been guilty of violating the racist codes of South Africa, all had been forced to commit the crimes because of their struggle for survival, and therefore their fate. Of the prisoners, played by Selaelo Dan Maredi, is able to leave prison after his sentence is finished, only to find conditions on the outside much more unbearable than condition s inside the prison. He returns to prison by getting arrested, his crime being that "he has committed the crime of doing nothing wrong", and tells the other three that they should stay in prison because there is nothing for them outside.

In the different skits presented by the actors, the crimes are acted out. One of the prisoners is in jail for killing a passbook official who was beating his mother. She had become a prostitute so that her son would be able to get a pass to work in a restricted area of South Africa. In another skit, a second prisoner is arrested for trying to save his father by driving him to the hospital in the family car. Only the father has a driver's license, so the son who has no license decides to drive him. He is stopped by security police, and after striking one, the other arrests him.

Another is a prisoner because he pulls the black driver of a burning car and cannot save the two white passengers in the back seat because the door is jammed. These and other incidents show the oppression of the Apartheid system. Just by not having a pass, the black South African is subject to arrest and jail. This play makes clear how innocent people are forced to do what is necessary for their survival.

In the prison, the four decide to stage a hunger strike to protest conditions of poor food, indiscriminate beatings, and insect infested living quarters. One of the prisoners, played by Fana Kehana weakens and eats some food, but he goes back on the hunger strike in experiencing solidarity with the other prisoners.

The actors and authors of the play speak of their work by saying, "In making "Survival", we did not concern ourselves primarily with the subtler, more unique aspects of personal suffering. We are not Humanists. We were more concerned with the human man and the things that affect people generally. We did not try to interpret events through the specially sensitive experience of a gifted poet or novelist. Our material is what ordinary people think and feel. We hope this material will illuminate wider areas; areas the people whose thoughts and feelings we are reporting are perhaps themselves aware.

The characters we worked with were ordinary. There is not a poet amongst them. They are not particularly sensitive but are common and representative. Their needs and hopes are those of the people. For the people it is important that their needs and hopes be conceptualized. They should become fully aware of what they want. For those who live alongside the people, it is important that they too, should know. The people's hopes and needs are, in the long run, all that matters.

The primary intent of this production is to provide our audiences with exciting, entertaining theater; but it must be relevant as well. When we created and performed the piece in South Africa, we hoped to raise the consciousness of the people. Now, here is America, we hope to inform our audiences about life in an unjust society. But, the creative choices we have made along the way have been artistic rather than political. Our play is a celebration of future, joy, freedom for ALL PEOPLE."

APARTHEID: AN HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES

Apartheid, as it is practiced in Rhodesia and South Africa today is based on the concept of white supremacy. To maintain this, all other peoples must be separated from the whites except when they are needed for their labor. Classification is made strictly along race or color lines. This policy, however, is not new to South Africa or Rhodesia. It dis not first appear in South Africa when the National Party inaugurated it as a government policy in 1948, nor in Rhodesia with Ian Smith's unilateral declaration of independence in 1965. Apartheid is in fact a natural outcome of racial policies and pattersn practiced since the Europeans first established themselves in South Africa an Rhodesia.

Physical separation of races had been attempted by the early Dutch settlers but it failed because they could not control the frontier. The roots of racism developed from their self-centered religious beliefs; they regarded themselves as the chosen people of God, entering upon the promised land with a divine mission of driving out and destroying the blacks. By the end of the nineteenth century there was increased support for support for separation among missionaries and administrators. IN 1905 a commission set up by the British High Commissioner, Lord Milner, reported in favor of widespread separation in South Africa. The pass system used for blacks in South Africa today was first issued by the Dutch over two centuries ago. The Pass Laws were abolished when the British assumed control in 1814.

The policy of Apartheid is an expression of "the old instinct of self-preservation" on the part of whites. This idea was expressed by General Hertzog,- founder of the National Party and later by Prime Minister D. F. Malan. To achieve their goal of total separation, the South African government is at present exercising the largest forced movement of people in peace time. A total of 7 million blacks have been forced into the eroded area of the Homelands, which can only support an estimated 2.5 million; while 87 per cent of the land is reserved for four million whites. The government tries to justify their actions by claiming that they did not meet anyone when they first arrived in South Africa and that the Bantu people (who form the majority of the black population in South Africa today) entered South Africa from the north. There are several inconsistencies with this statement because the natives were known to have established trading relations with the Dutch even before their first settlement. Also, archaelogical studies prove that the Bantus were in South Africa as early as the thirteenth century or perhaps even earlier.

In Rhodesia, on the other hand the seeds of Apartheid was sown by Cecil Rhodes, who started the first settlement in 1886. In his own words he stated his perference for "land to niggers". As early as the 1890's he advocated the use of Pass Laws and the denial of black franchise. Rhodesia remained under the control of his company until 1923.

It seems evident then, that Apartheid is not a new policy to both South Africa and Rhodesia. In fact, the historical trends in both countries show that Apartheid was more or less an inevitable course.

Shah's Visit Provokes Indian Protests

Bombay

Police in India have arrested several hundred Iranian and Indian students protesting against the corruption and brutality of the Shah of Iran's government.

Demonstrations in many cities in recent months followed the outbreak of mass protests in Iran this winter and were touched off by the Shah's visit to India in February.

In the biggest of the demonstrations, about 1000 students in Delhi tried to stop the shah's motercade Feb. 2. Mounted police charged into the students, beating them and arresting 17 Iranians and about 250 others. When the police tried to separate the arrested Iranians from their Indian friends to identify them, women students joined hands to keep them all together.

In the next four days, students at all the major universities in India struck in protest against the police beatings and the threat to deport Iranians. On Feb. 4, for instance, students took to the streets in the northern city of Jaipur, where more than 50 students were injured by the police and nine were arrested. And on the same day, students struck here in this port city, where police picked up 23.

Since then there have been protests in other cities — in Bangalore in the south, for example, and in Poona, where 100 masked Iranian students and Indian supporters demonstrated April 2.

TOUGH LINE

The Indian government's tough line against the student strikers has been conditioned by its desire to stay on good terms with the shah to protect the aid-to-India programs and counterrevolutionary unity that he promotes.

although the Indian government came

Although the Indian government came to power pledging "restoration of democracy," Home Minister Charan Singh has stated that foreigners in India "have no rights they don't have in their own country." Prime Minister Morarji Desai claims that foreign students, as "guests of the country," have no political rights. Even though the government is well aware that Indian demonstrations in the U.S., Britain and elsewhere during the State of Emergencv declared by then Prime Minister Indira Gandhi played an important role in the mobilization against Gandhi's dictorial regime, the Desai government now wants to deny these same rights to Iranians in India.

There are nearly 3000 Iranian students in India, mostly concentrated in cities like Poona and Bangalore, and in Ludhiana in the Punjab in the north. They have faced continual harassment, including spying by SAVAK, the Iranian secret police organization, and they are ordered to stay in their homes or dormitories whenever Iranian officials visit India.

Since 1974 Iranian student demonstrations have been followed by deportations. The biggest outbreak came during the State of Emergency when 117 Iranians were arrested for protesting the deportation of a student. Political prisoners in the Delhi jail — including communist, socialist and Muslim organizations — joined them in a protest hunger strike.

Now such support is also being expressed in militant demonstrations in the streets of India's cities.

ISRAELI FINANCE MINISTER SIMCHA ERLICH VISITED SOUTH AFRICA in early February, the first time an Israeli cabinet member has made an official visit to the apartheid regime. Erlich arranged direct private South African investment in Israel of up to $50 million over the next three years as well as a $40 million line of credit for Israeli purchases from South Africa. The Israeli government hopes that the new measures will decrease Israel's balance of trade deficit with South Africa.

South Africa, on the other hand, stands to benefit from joint ventures with Israeli concerns, industrial investments in Israel for enterprises to process South African raw materials or partially finished goods, and from exports to Israel for re-export to other countries. As Erlich told an audience of South African businessmen during his stay Israel is able to act as a "bridgehead" into the Common Market and U.S. for South Africa, enabling South African exporters to avoid the extensive boycott on South African products.

Trade between Israel and South Africa now amounts to $90 million a year.

A SECOND SHIPMENT OF U.S. ARMS HAS ARRIVED IN LEBANON as part of a $25 million military aid agreement concluded in September, 1977. The U.S. shipped 49 M113 armoured personnel carriers to the Lebanese government, which is in the process of reconstructing its army after the splits and disintegration it suffered during the civil war. In November 5000 M16 rifles are reported to have arrived in Lebanon, along with ammunition.

ISRAELI REPRESSION AT BETHLEHEM UNIVERSITY CONTINUES. Several months ago six students were arrested for "unauthorized publication" of a university journal. Those students are currently out on bail, awaiting trial in a military court. In December five more students were arrested and charged with holding an "illegal gathering." It is a criminal offense in the occupied areas to hold any political gathering without the formal approval of the military governor. The meeting on December 13, called to protest Sadat's diplomatic initiative, had been attended by 600 students and teachers from Bethlehem and Bir Zeit Universities.

The detained students include Mohammed Yussef Abarghit, Bassan Elias Banura, Yussef Mohammed al Maslamej, Yussef Othman an Namari, and Hamdi Ibrahim Farraj.

TWO BIR ZEIT UNIVERSITY STUDENTS WERE BEATEN SEVERELY AT THE MILITARY GOVERNOR'S OFFICE IN RAMALLAH on January 6. The occupation authorities were trying to force the students to confess that they had stoned a military vehicle, which they denied. One of the students, Khalid Mohammed Abid Rubboh was hospitalized after his release when he collapsed, was in severe pain, had an erratic pulse, and was possibly suffering from internal bleeding.

A letter protesting the brutality was signed by nine teachers at Bir Zeit, predominantly foreign staff members. The signatories included, according to the letter, "those who directly witnesses the entry of the students into the interrogation building, the sounds of the interrogation, the silhouetted figures of those giving and receiving blows, the emergence of the victims and the medical examination and hospitalization."

A U.S. WOMAN HAS BEEN SENTENCED TO FIVE YEARS IN AN ISRAELI PRISON for allegedly conveying information to a "terrorist" organization and rendering service to an illegal organization. The prisoner is Terre Fleener, a 23-year-old student from Texas. Although the trial was held in secret and no one present has been allowed to divulge the details, the acts alleged apparently involve only standard "tourist" photos of public areas. Following her arrest, F.B.I. agents interrogated her relatives, University of Texas officials and a teacher about Fleener, telling at least one person that they were gathering information at the request of the Israelis, and not investigating any possible violation of U.S. law. Professor Catherine Edwards, a teacher of International Politics at the University of Texas at San Antonio reports that the F.B.I. agents questioned her about the political attitudes Fleener had expressed in the classroom and about her position on the Middle East conflict.

Attorney Felicia Langer is appealing Terre Fleener's harsh sentence. A National Committee to Defend the Human Rights of Terre Fleener has been formed. (Write to P.O. Box 28326, San Antonio, Texas, 78228.

ISRAEL ARRESTED TWO JOURNALISTS ON SECURITY CHARGES in January. Hans Lebrecht, an Israeli journalist for L'Humanite, L'Unita and East German radio, and a member of the Central Committee of Rakah, the Israeli Communist Party, and Kanayotis Paschalis, a Cypriot press photographer were held for allegedly "consorting with hostile organizations." A police official told the court that the "spying" consisted of the collection of government yearbooks, maps and other materials available to the public.

Felicia Langer, Lebrecht's defense attorney, described the arrests as "political revenge and attempted intimidation of a journalist." She said that Lebrecht had never been involved with spying.

TAYSIR AL ARURI HAS BEEN FREED FROM ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION. After being held without charges since April 1974 al Aruri, a professor of physics at Bir Zeit University was released by the occupation authorities in January. Petitions and demonstrations in the U.S. coordinated by the Palestine Human Rights Campaign had demanded al Aruri's release.

However, as soon as some of the administrative detainees are released, others are arrested and jailed without charges. In November 1977, for example, Suleiman Abu Jalia and Abd al Rahman Alarabawi were seized under the Defense Regulations of 1945, draconian laws from the British colonial period.

LEBANESE WORKERS IN ISRAEL ARE BEING PAID LOWER WAGES THAN THEIR ISRAELI COUNTERPARTS, according to Major Sa'ad Haddad commander of the right wing Lebanese forces allied with Israel. When the Histadrut Secretary General Yeruham Meshal met with him, Haddad complained that the workers who pass into Israel through the so-called "Good Fence" are discriminated against; they receive lower wages and no social benefits.

ARAB-AMERICAN ARRESTED IN ISRAEL

FREE SAMI ESMA
FREE SA ESI

Sami Esmail, a U.S. citizen of Palestinian descent, was arrested at the Ben Gurion Airport in Israel on December 21. He had been enroute from Michigan to visit his father, who was near death in Ramallah in the West Bank.

Esmail was charged with "membership in an illegal organization" (the PFLP) and "contacts with enemy agents." The arrest apparently stems from his political activities at Michigan State University, where he was a graduate student and teaching assistant and involved in Arab student affairs. The FBI has not denied that he was under surveillance in East Lansing, or that they furnished information about him to Israel.

FBI agents told an aide to Michigan Congressman Bob Carr, who inquired into the case, that it was "common practice" to exchange intelligence information with "friendly governments."

The indictment cited meetings and literature distribution in which Esmail is supposed to have participated in Michigan. The Israeli government also charges that Esmail traveled to Libya in August 1976 for military training at a PFLP camp. Some confusion arose on this point when Israeli officials in the U.S. stated in response to questions that Esmail had spent "four" or "several" weeks in Libya. The National Committee to Defend the Human Rights of Sami Esmail, which contacted people who had seen Esmail in the U.S. during August, came to believe the trip to Libya never took place. Later it became clear that the Israelis were charging Esmail with spending only two weeks in Libya.

Sami Esmail himself appears never to have denied this. Ernest Goodman, a Detroit attorney who was a National Lawyers Guild observer at part of the trial, related Esmail's testimony that he had been given a free ticket to Libya in August 1976 as part of a Libyan government program to attract intellectuals to their country. He spent two weeks in Libya, according to this account, where he participated in meetings and discussions about the Palestinian resistance. At the end of two weeks, according to the report of his testimony, Esmail was offered an opportunity for military training and service in Lebanon with the PFLP, but only on condition that he make a six month commitment. He declined the offer, and returned to the U.S. by the end of August.

The only evidence produced thus far, according to Goodman, are three confessions signed by Sami Esmail. All three were signed before he was allowed to see his attorney, Felicia Langer, and before he was allowed — under guard — to visit his father, who was by then unable to recognize his son, and on the verge of death from arteriosclerosis.

Langer has asked that the confessions be dismissed as evidence since they were extracted by coercion. According to the report, Sami testified that he was questioned for prolonged periods, denied more than two consecutive hours sleep for an entire week; and that he was punched and forced to stand holding a heavy chair for a long time. The third and most damaging statement is in Hebrew, a language which Sami does not speak or read. The police claim that Sami made a statement in Arabic which was then translated into Hebrew and written down. Sami denies that the confession is true.

The U.S. State Department failed to take action which could have helped Sami's defense. They refused to waive diplomatic immunity to allow Mark Davidson, a U.S. consular official, to testify at the hearing to determine the admissability of the confessions. Davidson, the first consular official to visit Sami, had received his complaint of mistreatment by the authorities and had observed his condition. Felicia Langer believed Davidson's testimony would help show that the confessions were coerced. However, the State Department allowed Davidson only to submit an affidavit, to which the prosecution objected. The court upheld the prosecution objection, preventing even one affidavit from being entered as evidence.

The arrest and trial of Sami Esmail have raised questions about Israel's claim to extraterritorial jurisdiction — the right to try a person for an act committed outside its border — which is contrary to the fundamental principles of most legal systems. Israel's claim, made in a far more extended way than that of any other state, includes subjecting people in the U.S. to trial for acts completely legal where committed. Thus Sami Esmail is on trial in great measure for his political activities in Michigan — making statements, holding meetings, distributing literature and, in the words of the indictment, "discussing ideology," all protected by the U.S. Constitution.

The F.B.I.'s role in the case is particularly subject to criticism. If, as seems apparent, the F.B.I. furnished information on Sami's political activities to Israel, they made him vulnerable to trial in Tel Aviv for the very acts which could not lead to his arrest in the U.S.

The National Committee to Defend the Human Right of Sami Esmail has asked that people write to the Israeli Embassy in Washington to demand that Sami be freed, and to the State Department to request that all appropriate action be taken to obtain Sami's release. Contributions toward the costs of his defense may be sent to the National Committee at 1118 South Harrison, East Lansing, Michigan, 48823.

PALESTINIAN WOMEN SPEAK

In an interview with Mai Sayegh, the Vice President of the General Union of Palestinian Women, we asked about the role of her organization. The Union was formed shortly after the PLO was founded in 1964. But its roots go further back in Palestinian history, as Mai Sayegh explained.

"In 1919 in Jerusalem, two women, Zalikha Ishaq al-Shihabi and Leila Sakakini started the first Palestinian Women's Union. The Palestinian Women's Union led demonstrations against the British Mandate, against immigration to Palestine, and against (the British) taking prisoners to jail and hanging them."

"The organization was an answer to the aggression against the Palestinian people," Mai Sayegh explained. "From the beginning it had a political basis and was mainly to organize women to participate more and more to liberate Palestinian land."

Women, mostly from the urban middle class, held a number of conferences during the 1920's to organize against the British sponsorship of Zionism. And in the 1936-39 armed rebellion in Palestine, peasant women supported, and in some cases participated, alongside the fighters.

"When the PLO was formed," Mai Sayegh continued, "the women started thinking about reorganizing ourselves. Now the Union has branches in all countries where the Palestinian people live. The members number in the tens of thousands."

Sayegh described the work of affiliated women's groups on the Israeli-occupied West Bank. "The women there lead demonstrations, they organize in commissions to visit prisoners, to collect food and clothing for prisoners. They organize in commissions to look after families of martyrs.

"The women in the West Bank produce embroidery and dresses which we sell through the General Union in Beirut. We send the money back to them because they want to earn a living from this production. We encouraged the opening of more and more of our workshops so that Palestinian women wouldn't have to work in Israeli factories. We encourage them to work more and more with the Union and the Palestinian organizations."

In discussing the role of Palestinian women in the struggle, Sayegh pointed out:

"The Palestianian women, like all Arab women, have the problem of traditions. In spite of all she gives to the revolution, she is still secondary in the family, and in Palestinian society. And she feels the revolution is not her main job. So you have to transform the concept of the woman in her own mind. The concept of her role has to be changed.

"We want more women to know their role through their fight. We want to make vaster and vaster the role of the woman.

"Of course there are big changes. We interviewed 100 women from Tal al Za'atar for a book we are preparing. Many of the women, one — who lost three sons in the fighting — remembers that she lost three sons, but she speaks more deeply about the daughter she lost. Her daughter was a member of the revolution. She's proud of that. This gives a hint about the changes in her mind."

In a quiet yet firm voice which slipped in and out of Arabic and English, Zeinab Qassem told us about the past several years of her life, the responsibilities she has shouldered and her dreams for the future.

Zeinab, now 17, was in a militia unit of al Fateh when the right-wing besieged the Tal al Za'atar refugee camp during the war in Lebanon. "I carried a Kalashnikov and besides that a first aid kit because I had training from a doctor," she explained. "All the fighters were doing many jobs, cooking, helping with water. Many of the girls and women were killed, because we would keep working in the day. You could always work at night, but in the morning the enemy could see you."

Just after the camp fell to the rightists, after 53 days of resistance, Zeinab escaped with a group of the fighters and travelled in the mountains with very little food and water for six days before reaching safety in the town od Damour. She now lives in Damour with her mother, and 15,000 other survivors of Tal al Za'atar. Zeinab's bather, brother, sister and her sister's children were killed during the siege of the camp.

"I was born in Tal al Za'atar, and studied in Tal al Za'atar," Zeinab explained. "And I had military training in Tal al Za'atar. Everything in Tal al Za'atar. I have never seen Palestine. My family is from Kiryat Shimona, in Palestine. I know everything about it, but I don't see it. My dream is to marry in Palestine, not here."

We asked: "From what you know about fighting, how do you think the revolution can defeat Zionism? Israel had sophisticated weapons, tanks, napalm..."

"The revolution is not in the guns only," Zeinab responded. She noted the daily political work of the revolution and added, "Palestine is not for Zionism. We can liberate Palestine. Not now, it will be a long time for us to liberate Palestine."

Zeinab now heads the military training for 350 orphaned members of the Palestinian youth organizations, Ashbal and Azhrat, age seven to fourteen. When we met her she was helping to complete preparations for a boarding school for the orphans where she would work. Her work with the youth is the result of a conscious decision, for, "the new generation will continue our revolution," she asserts.

Support Our Sisters

ATTENTION!

We have become aware that due to misinformation, rumors are circulating about our demands. Listed below are the compromise proposal demands for treatment of women's News in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

1) One page per day of the Collegian will be allocated for women's news, with not more than 25% of that space per day allocated to advertising.

Women's news stories of national importance will appear on pages 1 - 3 of the paper.

2) Advertisements to appear on women's news pages must meet with the prior approval of the Women's Editor or Assistant Women's Editor. The Women's Editor and Assistant Women's Editor will have equal control over the content of all stories relating to women's issues appearing in the Collegian.

Placement of women's news stories appearing on pages 1 - 3 will be decided jointly and on an equal basis by the Women's Editor and the News Editor, with conflicts mediated by the Editor-in-Chief.

The Women's Editor and Assistant Women's Editor will have total control over the placement of stories appearing on women's news pages. Because, in the opinion of the women's community, women's sports news is being successfully integrated into the sports pages, women's sports news will remain under the jurisdiction of the sports department.

3) The space allocated for women's news will not infringe on the space already existing for Black Affairs.

4) The selection of the Women's Editor and the Assistant Women's Editor will be [illegible] by [illegible] interviewing board comprised of the current Women's Editor and one representative each from the Everywoman's Center, Women's Studies, the Third World Women's Center, and the Lesbian Union, with input from the UMass women's community.

The occupation of the Collegian by University women is an act which must be viewed in its proper historical and political perspective. It is not just an isolated incident significant only to UMass women and Collegian readers and staff. It is instead one manifestation of a struggle which extends across national, sexual, or racial boundaries. All of us, whether black, white, Hispanic, Asian, gay straight, female or male, are potential or actual victims of the same oppression. The form or details of our oppressions may differ, but the source remains the same, and parallels can be drawn between the experiences of any oppressed group..

For example, the same accusations of inferiority used against black people were and are used against women in general. The stereotyped view of both groups is that we are less intelligent (than white men), are governed more by emotion than reason, lack organizational and executive ability, and should not compete in business or professional activities. The same motives of economic exploitation, fear, and insecurity are at work in both cases.

In this country, the women's movement has historically been allied with the struggle of black people. The leaders of the women's suffrage movement were also leaders in the movement for the abolition of slavery, and vice versa. Susan B. Anthony was a strong and active worker in both movements. Sojourner Truth's most famous public speech was made in defense of the rights and abilities of women. The Quakers, black and white, were as fearless in the opposition of slavery as they were determined in their belief in sexual equality. Progressive movements in that time knew the need for mutual support and united action.

Even until today the women's movement has supported the struggle of black and Third World people, identifying racism, sexism, and classism as major oppressive forces in our culture. However, the struggle of women is often considered less legitimate than those of other groups. The same men who would be embarrassed by an accusation of racism will still laugh and even proudly proclaim their agreement to a charge of sexism.

One favorite strategy of oppression is "divide and conquer", and one way of achieving that goal is to misrepresent the nature and aims of any group in rebellion against the existing power structure. The mass media can be a powerful tool both for the oppressor and the oppressed. Whenever we try to take control of the media, we are insisting on our right to print our own words about ourselves, and to educate ourselves and others about issues we consider important. Of course, when we attempt this, there is always a struggle. Black and Third World students here at UMass had to occupy Whitmore and demand this control. One result of that occupation was Nummo News, which was hailed at the women's occupation support rally last week as "the best thing that has happened to the Collegian yet."

Women occupied the Collegian to take control of the words printed about ourselves. At this point, no one needs to be reminded of the racist and sexist bias of the Collegian, or the reasonableness of the women's demand for one page of news per day, with 25 percent ads, to be controlled by women. This is less space than is given to the Sports section!

The women in occupation recognized the importance of solidarity with other progressive groups on campus. Some of the demands made by the women are that "the space allocated for women's news will not infringe on the space already existing for Black Affairs" and that the group selecting the Women's Editor shall include representatives from the Everywoman's Center, Women's Studies, the Third World Women's Center, and the Lesbian Union.

These women are trying to develop an open forum for all UMass women to determine the priorities of what gets printed. This will give greater media access to such doubly-oppressed groups as black women, who suffer the oppressions of race and gender; and lesbians, who suffer the oppressions of gender and sexual preference.

The unification of movements on campus is correctly perceived by gender; and lesbians, who suffer the oppressions of gender and sexual preference.

The unification of movements on campus is correctly perceived by the administration as a threat to its control. Academic suspension, long used as a tool of the administration to remove "undesirables" (politically active people) from campus, was used against the women occupying the Collegian offices. Now more than ever, every progressive person on campus must support the women who participated in the occupation, and the demand for women's pages. All of us need them. Remember, none of us are free until all of us are free. Unite, and the people united will never be defeated!

Have a good summer, everyone, and Jah bless you all.

From your sister,
Wassi

---

The fact-finding Chancellor's Commission on Women's News in the Collegian will consist of the following: two representatives of the women's occupation community, two representatives from the Collegian, three faculty members (Jean Elshtain, Cathy Portuges and Lewis Killian), and three non-voting members: the U Mass Ombudsman, a member of the Chancellor's staff, and the Associate Provost concerned with matters of Affirmative Action, sexism, etc.

AGREEMENT--page two for the UMass Women's Occupation Community — Julie Melrose, Women's Community for the staff and Board of Editors of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian — William Sundstrom, Editor-in-Chief, COLLEGIAN for Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery — Robert L. Woodbury

Robert L. Woodbury
Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs

Last Thursday a document was signed by a representative for the women's community, a representative for the Collegian staff and Board of Editors, and by Robert L. Woodbury for Chancellor Bromery that would affect formulation of a fact-finding Chancellor's Commission on Women's News in the Collegian.

The Commission will consist of seven voting members and three non-voting members. Voting members are Jean Elshtain, Cathy Portuges, and Lewis Killian from the faculty, Chris Decker and Dorothy Howard as representatives of the women's community, and Laura Bassett and Mark Lecesse representing the Collegian. Non-voting members are the University Ombudsperson, a member of the Chancellor's staff, and the Associate Provost concerned with matters of Affirmative Action, sexism, etc. A copy of the document is attached.

"The women's occupation community wishes to emphasize our conviction that our demands are minimal and reasonable and that we will continue to urge their implementation without recess. There can be no greater testimony to the oppression of women than the fact that, despite the support of women throughout America and in six foreign countries, we have been unable to move the Collegian from its blatantly sexist policies.

"Recent Supreme Court decisions and legislation concerning abortion indicate that without further feminist activism the progress of the last ten years will be lost. We hope our actions will give other women the courage to move definitively to take power over their own lives."

—Chris Decker, member of the women's community's negotiating team and one of two women's community's representatives on the Chancellor's Commission

Love Poem For Humanity

This is called a love poem for humanity. I think that humanity manifests itself through many characteristics within many people. I wrote this poem because I thought humanity had died and left me alone to die too. It seemed as I had comfortable prepared myself to vanish away through the center of my sun. It was then when I realized that humanity must live somewhere through me, through you, and through time, somewhere. I then went through my ancient records to connect with the time when humanity thrived and we were fully alive.

Eyes shining and dancing to the beat of your inner music taking me back to the times of beginning
I could feel that you have been here as long as I
I didn't know your face or name□but I did know you by the music your spirit played that bewildering sound counting you into me
And I wanted it
for always as it was in the beginning traveling through the infinite into infinity
into the simple state of the nothingness
I could feel and see the truth of you and I wanted you to know how I see you
the undying beauty of your essence a treasure
You never died
You were never sent back you always returned and I wanted you to understand how great you really are
And as I loved you in the beginning of all times
so is my love for you now
And I have loved you
for always

Now that I am forced to say in a round about way that we are meant forever and that I can still see your face trying to hide your struggle from me
I still judge you by the mustic your spirit played and I wanted that sweet sound for always Yes, I do need you to know that such high levels of energy need its kind
You should feel a need for me
Cause I have loved you through the infinite into the simpleness of the nothingness which is to say I have never judged you by your life in the physical world that I see you in a time continuum and even though I did not understand your travels in struggle within the so called real illusioned world

I still loved you for all times
Tomorrow will bring joy for you and me and there will always be tomorrow forever living in tomorrow and reflecting upon the now projecting the past living in the future times of tomorrows
Yes,
Through the infinite
beyong the infinity into the state of nothingness of our essence within the encompassing realm of yesterdays something of distant confusion
Yesterday's illusions
Tomorrow's reflections of today's neglections within times rejections through all of the traits of yesterday's truths of tomorrow's memories
I have loved you forever and have wanted you for always so it will be through time the undying forces of you and me forever
into the infinite
Your music within your spirit will meet me there within the core of infinite infinity there we can live in peace you and I living in the center of time no more worries
no more fear living for and through each other and I wanted it for always forever
living for and through each other for always living in the center of time
for always
There were no forces that could stop us because we were moving with it all friends of the universe all of the doors opened and we were like Gods of time
We were free wise and powerful sending out life-giving energy and like magic life came back to us
We were masters
One with the Great living in the core of the infinite and I wanted it
for always
The best of it all was at our finger tips and we were that tingling flow constant with it all and still I remember that sound like the sound of water flowing slowly intensifying itself in interchangeable colors of gay ritual and then the colors from the sound became the light and the light was the color and the color was the sound and it all was us moving outward like sun rays
from world to world
And I wanted it to last forever

But we are here in this physical existence with trials of struggles battling the contradictions of ying and yang sex and religion truth and lies life and death peace and war lefts and rights fronts and backs beauty and beast tormenting our soul through all of that remember where we came from beyong the infinite through infinity into the center of time

don't you remember how you wanted it to last forever
I never forgot
It all rests within my mind and it was you who helped me to question me
Questioning me helped me to see your essence through the music that your spirit played
You see I do know you
Don't you know me
Our energies were there together in the seed of life
You can't forget
We need to remember to make it back again
Don't you want to go home
Don't you want to live in peace
Have you forgotten
what it is like to be free.

Visionas De Una Poetica, Y Una Poeta (Visions of a Poetic and a Poet)

an Interview with Benny Pastoriza

by
Wanda J. Raverneil

"It is our duty to fight for our freedom it is our duty to win."
Peg Averill / Liberation News Service

After her smile, you notice the house. Small, warm, it smells of spicy roast chicken, because it is dinnertime. And after she takes your coat, you notice a man of middle years sitting at the table in the kitchen. He is Pedro, Benny's father, and the woman who has wblcomed you says her name is Olga. Then you tell her your name and say why you are here, and she says her son will be down in a minute, and you should have a seat. And you smile at both of them, because they don't speak English that well, but you forget that they can understand it just fine, but you are nervous and trying to remember your high school Spanish. And it is doubly embarassing because Benny's brother and sister, Petrito, 13 and Olgita, 9, have only been here 3 weeks and already their English is so good...

And after you remain standing for awhile, you sit down in a soft chair, and that is when you take the time to notice the painting on the wall of a woman-South American by her garb and her stance, and then you notice how steep the stairway is that divides the cozy living room from the even cozier kitchen, and the you see long legs in beige slacks moving down these steep steps, moving easily.

He is appologizing — he has not long been home — his hands are at the collar of this white shirt fiddling with his bow tie. 'Excuse me, but I don't know how to undo my tie. I wanted a real bow tie, but I don't know how to do them yet.' He has thick, crow-black hair and brows, bright eyes and warm olive skin. He is talking, and you see his talk, but if you listen, you can hear his quiet, and he is thinking his father for undoing his tie, and then you notice the other painting, large and unframed and hanging on the wall by the door. The figure in the painting sits cross-legged on a couch, head bent, a large open book in his lap. The painting is called, 'The Solitude of the Poet'. The poet is Benny Pastoriza. He is asking you to come upstairs to his room. where his rocker is. It is his room, his place, and then you follow him up those steep stains...

"I come from a tradition — a country — where writing is left to people who are mad. Only those tho are crazy will write...The first poem I wrote — I wrote in a foreign language. Italian. Why? Because I wanted to disguise myself. I was seventeen then. But when I was nine," he perks up at the remembrance — then he freezes, translating his toughts before he speaks. "I lived near a forest in Puerto Rico. El Yunque. Humacao — (the town where he was born) a beautiful town, because it is near the forest and also near the sea. My house was near a stream, and I would go down and sit on the banks and recite poems that were in my head out loud, and then write them in the water with a long stick...It was hard for me to open myself, because I was in an environemnt where writing was not important."

Benny completed high school in two years, through an honors program ('I never got to be a senior.'), and entered the University of Puerto Rico, in 1972 to study literature in the Spanish department. 1975 was a crucial year for Benny: he won the first of two awards for poetry at the University, spent part of his summer traveling in Europe, and for his volume, Gotas Para La Ciudad, he received the Ateneo Puertorriqueno, on his birthday, December 14. He was then 21 years old.

"It is equivalent to a Pulitzer. Usually, only well-knowns participate in the award. One of the requirements is that it has to be a very fine book. When I won the award, they sent me a telegram, because they wanted to meet me. I was afraid, because I was so young. Usually the award for for writers who are known and in their thirties and forties: Rene Marquez, Enrique Laguerre, Evaristo Ribera Chevremont, Luis Pales Matos). When they were giving the awards, they gave them by categories — novels, essayists — and when they called for poetry and I stood up, they were all stunned. Some people were laughing. And I felt so strange. i cannot even describe the feeling. Like I was trying to get into a worle to which I did not really belong..."

Gotas Para La Ciudad: an idolization of nature

"At the beginning, I looked at nature trying to find the meaning of what we were. Although deep inside, I knew that my poetry was going to be only an intention, a false reality. Nature (in Gotas] was idolized and also the Man who lived in this nature. The poetry of my first period is not cutting, is not the truth, doesn't go to the soul — not where everybody can understand. It is the poetry of the intellectual."

Although Benny has completed two volumes of poetry, he is afraid to have them published. "I never like what I write. Like wine, I let it age and then look at it with new eyes. All good writers are like that — they don't think their works are good enough." He goes through periods when he keeps his manuscripts in paper bags — "When I think they're trash," countered by times when he keeps them bound in a fine leather case — "When I think they are the best!"

Benny graduated summa cum laude from the University of Puerto Rico in May 1976. While studying for his M.A. in Spanish, he worked as a tour guide in the Museum of Puerto Rico in San Juan. He joined a workshop with three of the up-and-coming poets in Puerto Rico today, and he worked on his second book.

In his book Decires Desmirriados en Monovision, Benny deals with the world of technology. "I started to look for new elements," he gestures towards objects in his room, "like a bookcase, a glass, a radio...and I started walking and I started living. And then you start seeing the power each physical element has. And criticize a whole nation through a radio! And then you combine that with another element and you create more poetry...Of all this organization to prove his superficial way of living. This (book) is more universal, not just Puerto Rican, but Man. In all my work, I never write the words Puerto Rico or Puerto Rican. I feel that if my works were translated, anybody could read them."

Nominated in November 1976 to run for the office of Mayor of Humacap (his home town) on the independent party ticket, Benny declined because he felt he was too much of a writer. Even his analysis of the United States vs Puerto Rico situation is somewhat poetic.

"Every element in Puerto Rican nature, which is stunning — which is why they call it the island of enchantment — which is a colony — reflects the Puerto Rican's way of living and thinking. We are too tropical. In our heads, we are too tropical. We tend to dwell on the peace and tranquality that is island living, forgetting about the storms that come. In this case, the storm is the U.S...."

Benny arrived in Philadelphia in July 1977 by himself. ('I chose Philadelphia, because I heard it was a city with history. In truth, it has no history — just dates.") He was on the verge of returning to Puerto Rico several times because he was homesick.

"I made my parents come here. I kept writing to them, telling them that I thought I was going to die here. They had their own house (in Puerto Rico) and supermarket and all. But this country...it like...drowns you...But I had to come here." he smiles, earnest, "because all great writers come here. Garcia Lorca came to New York. Pablo Neruda came here. So I, as a writer, I had to come here."

Benny entered Temple University's Graduate School in September of 1977 to continue his Master of Arts studies in Puerto Rican Literature. He goes to school at night, and teaches Spanish to high school students at the progresssive Franklin Learning Center at Broad and Green Streets during the day. In his spare time, he works on two new books. The first, a volume of Poetry, is entitled, Lo Color de lo Incolor: Visiones de Una Generacion Discotizada. "In that book, I'm trying to relate the surrealistic world of the dicotech. The best live Dali you can see. The surrealistic life of my generation. The book is full of lights, sounds, clowns (which is what the people look like) pretending to live a lif which has no existence at all.

"I am also writing a poetic historic book based on the Indians of Puerto Rico. Tainos. Who have 3,500 years of history. The book will be based entirely on their vocabulary. Not a single word in Spanish."

You ask him when writing became difficult for him, and you see him talking while you listen for his quiet, knowing it has never quite relinquished him. "It became difficult when I became conscious that there was mystery behind the language. Every language has a secr Spanish is so difficult to dominate ... " Then you ask him for a poem to share with everyone, and he gives you one, [from Decires) and it is in Spanish, and he trusts you to translate it, and you try to but you can't, so you leave it alone.

U.S. STUDENT CONTRADICTIONS ON CLASS SUICIDE

Progressive people at this time find themselves in an organizing dilemma. The role of the petty bourgeoisie is key in this lull period. The essential problem is whose side the student will fight on. If one understands our story they understand that a united people change history, not just a few individuals. All classes consciously, or unconsciously must deal with the oppressors. All people who have to sell their labor are workers. The U.S. is not like any other oppressive country; is far more complex. People who desire change in their lifetime better understand that they must fight to win over the student both here and abroad.

Why should progressive people fight for the petty bourgeoisie? They must fight because who ever controls the petty bourgeoisie's thinking will win the last battle. If people have problems with this last statement, I challenge them to objectively observe our part in the last 80 yrs; people will find that those who took part in any serious change were often former students themselves. Students who are not just playing games with the oppressors must realize that they must commit class suicide. What is class suicide? People must give up the illusion of joining the oppressor; they must give up the oppressor's values, and goals. The fight will come down to who controls the intellegencia. Progressive elements must begin to organize the future intellegencia for social change and stopped being dogmatic by using just words that scare these potential fighters against oppression away. People in time will be able to reach the same conclusion others have come to. Let a word to the wise be sufficient. Time for direct action is now, not tomorrow.

Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga

STUDENT ACTIVISM A SOURCE FOR TOTAL CHANGE

This current force of energy at UMass will go down in our story. The force started last semester with the victory of students, and concerned peoples to force U of Mass to sell all Stocks in South Africa. A momentum started that set waves all throughout the world, there is a student movement alive, and all U.S. students and friends are not seeking to be just theoraticians. Without practice there will be no progressive theory to transform society. Practice is the only way to resolve contradictions; theory and practice must be one. Direct action objectively taken after viewing the subjective conditions will lead to the correct path.

There are many students of change who refuse to submit to a spiritual or unseen force. I find that style of student lacking a correct understanding of the masses and their story. People are not just material Beings; as people who continue this path will eventually find out. I have found these people, who advocate that they do not believe in an unseen force that cannot be traditionally measured, contradiction. Often I have seen these same people, when a crisis comes up jump down to the floor, and seek a non-material or spiritual solution to their problems. The U.S. is a complex society with many contradictions; an example is that many people of change adopt the oppressor's values in this society which is unconsciously based on this countries dogmatic religious past. I have found no genuine atheist in this country because most of the society has consciously or unconsciously taken on the oppressors religious values. The people must create new values.

Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga

YES! SEXISM IS AT UMASS

The struggle against the oppressor is often frustrating, but it is needed. People can criticize the women occupiers of the Collegian, but the people's story will find that direct action was needed. Some of the less dogmatic women occupiers admitted their errors in the takeover, and concerned people must realize that there is no blueprint for change. The women were correct in their stance against the sexist and backwards Collegian staff. For example, articles about women being raped on this campus and in the Amherst area have become front page news as a result of the takeover.

The issue of a separate section for Women's News is complex because there is no quick answer; of course all news should be together, but the Collegian has already admitted to the existence of sexism in the paper. If there was not racism and sexism in the society, there would be no need for Black Affairs, Nummo News, or a women's section. Institutional or united racism was the reason that Black Affairs and Nummo News were formed. The while male dominAted Collegian staff, at that time, saw no reason to have U.S. African staff members. Their rationalization during both takeovers was that they were not racist even though they did not have so-called minority staff members, and that most people are not interested in minority news. The last statement was the primary reason for the two takeovers of the Collegian paper by U.S. African students. There was not enough serious news coverage pertaining to oppressed people locally and around the world.

Women also have the Constitutional right in this nation to be heard. If the activist women recognize the need for a separate section for women in the paper, then they should take a vote of women on campus so that they will not alienate the majority of women students. They must have internal support as well as external support if they want to organize the masses. I have found many of the white women on this campus too pessimistic about the issues involved with the women's takeover. It is not enough to criticize another individual or group without giving them a thought-out solution. I challenge women and men who are concerned about this problem to come up with some viable answers. There should not be a few people making the decisions for the majority, and people who are struggling against their oppressors must first have local support for mass action. There were mistakes made during the takeover, but these women showed the world that UMass is backwards like the rest of the country.

Frances Crowe, a white woman who is an elder in the movement, last week stated that women in China did not begin to end sexism until extreme poverty and wealth were ended. I am not saying that sexism should not be fought; I am saying that we must not forget about the principal enemy of all oppressed people. This is the reason why white women did not get many black women to actively participate in their just actions. Most oppressed women of color will often tell an investigator that sexism alone is not the principal problem, rather the oppression of the masses of people of the world. I am open for constructive criticism on this issue. The struggle against the oppressor is one!

Knapp named president

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Cornell University Provost David C. Knapp yesterday was elected president of the University of Massachusetts here by the university's Board of Trustees.

Knapp said last night in a telephone interview that he has accepted the position as head of the university system of three campuses and over 35,000 students.

"I'm pleased and delighted ... UMass is a great institution," he said. "It's grown rapidly in the last thirty years and has a great future."

Knapp was elected by the trustees on the second ballot by a 12-8 margin over Brooklyn College Associate Provost Marilyn Gittell, who was also one of five finalists picked up by the presidential search committee.

The other three finalists still in contention going into yesterday's trustee meeting were Harvard University law professor James Vorenberg, UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Yale University Dean Charles Foster.

However, prior to the first ballot, search committee chairman Stephen G. Breyer informed the trustees that Foster did not consider himself a serious candidate for the post, and his name was taken out of contention. That cut the number of finalists to four.

None of the four finalists on the first ballot received the simple majority of 11 votes from the 20 voting trustees. Knapp came within one vote, receiving 10 votes on the first ballot. He was followed by Gittell, with seven votes, Bromery, with two votes and Vorenberg, who received one vote.

The next ballot settled the issue as Knapp received 12 votes and Gittell received eight votes from the trustees.

Bromery last night said he had no comment on the trustees vote.

Knapp, a 1947 graduate of Syracuse University, received his masters degree and Ph.D in political science from the University of Chicago.

He taught at the University of New Hampshire from 1953 to 1961, when he was chosen Dean of the College of Liberal Arts. He left New Hampshire in 1963 to work with the American Council on Education before moving on in 1968 to his first administrative position at Cornell.

He served as acting provost at Cornell from Nov. 1972 to May 1973, before becoming provost in August 1974.

Knapp pleased to be president

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

"I was out when the decision came," Cornell University provost David C. Knapp said last night at his home in Ithaca, N.Y. "My wife accepted for me over the telephone so I guess I'm president," he said.

Knapp said he was "pleased and delighted" with his election as new UMass president by the Board of Trustees yesterday.

Knapp was elected by the trustees on the second ballot by a 12-8 margin over Brooklyn N.Y. College Provost Marilyn Gittell. He was one of four finalists selected by the presidential search committee, which began its search process last September when former UMass president Robert C. Wood announced his resignation effective January 1.

"I think public higher education in New England has real growth ahead of it," Knapp said. "UMass is a solid institution and I'm glad to be a part of its growth," he added.

The 50-year-old graduate of Syracuse University and the University of Chicago said his responsibilities at UMass will differ slightly from his position as Cornell provost. "There will be a higher proportion of external relations," Knapp said of the presidency.

Financial aid cut for next year

By MARIA MESSITT
Collegian Staff

Student's financial aid packages for the 1978-79 academic year will be cut 200 dollars due to an increased number of students without a corresponding increase in state and federal funds, according to Assistant Director of Financial Aid Marcia Sexton.

Scholarships and loans will be equally decreased, said Sexton. "I doubt that large amounts of money will be coming in later in the fall semester," she said.

For additional aid Sexton suggests students try help loans from their local banks, and outside scholarships. She also suggests university "03 jobs" (non-work study).

"The difference between 03 and work-study jobs is in the funding," she said. 03 workers are on the regular university payroll. 100 per cent of 03 salaries are paid by the particular UMass departments, unlike work-study jobs where financial aid pays 20 per cent of student's salaries, explained Sexton.

Students can begin to look for 03 jobs now in departments where they have skills to offer, or they can wait until the fall semester, said Sexton.

"Not many jobs are listed through the Student Employment Service," she said.

The majority of financial aid recipients will be notified within the next month, said Sexton.

The Financial Aid Office had similar troubles last year due mostly to the incoming freshman class that was 30 per cent larger than the previous year's. The troubles left the office with no aid for the spring semester.

According to UMass Financial Analyst John Nagle, the university's total state and federal funding for last year was $9,534,500 and next year's will be $10,115,500.

Approximately 40 per cent of UMass students receive some type of financial aid, said Nagle. Last year 800 to 1000 more students received financial aid than did the previous year. Sexton said it is difficult to tell how many more students will receive aid this year compared to last year until all the applications for aid are in.

Director of Freshman Admissions Dr. Deirdre Kedesdy said it's impossible to know how many students will be enrolled next semester until registration day. But Sexton said the number of students generally increases each year.

MSP upset by contract impasse

[Editor's note: what follows is an overview of the faculty — administration contract talks situation, based on interviews with Herbert V. Marsh, a member of the Massachusetts Society of Professors' executive board, and Zina Tillona, head of the administration bargaining team and special aide to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery]

NEWS ANALYSIS

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The faculty union is upset.

Members complain that administration bargainers do not take them seriously, and some privately say the administration is out to "break" the union.

Contract negotiations recently deteriorated to the point where the talks were broken off April 24. Each side later accused the other of breaking them off. However, the talks are slated to resume today.

Relations between the two sides have gotten progressively worse so that the union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, has made plans to withhold grades from the administration for a show of dissatisfaction.

The faculty has picketed the Whitmore administration building, and also University Board of Trustees meetings. Rumor has it the trustees don't like to meet here at the Amherst campus, so as to avoid such faculty displays. Faculty members also plan to picket this year's commencement, scheduled for May 27.

Stonewalling

Faculty members have accused the administration of "stonewalling" the faculty in contract negotiations, and of refusing to bargain in good faith.

"What's characteristic of most faculty is 'demoralized'," Marsh said. Marsh is a professor in the Plant and Soil Science dept. "We don't see things getting better,", he said.

"Ex-President Robert C. Wood once addressed the faculty senate and told the faculty senate, in effect, to go to hell," Marsh said. "It's this type of indifference which is perhaps the most frustrating thing. The re-allocation of resources is another symptom of trouble."

Former Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Paul L. Puryear last year proposed a long-range five-year plan for re-allocating university resources. The shift would have placed more emphasis on the professional schools, at the expense of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Administration officials are quick to differ.

"I assure you we take the MSP seriously," Tillona said. "My perception of reality is that we are not stonewalling."

"We want very much to have a contract," she said.

Sources have said both sides were aiming to complete a contract by the end of this semester. In light of recent events, this no longer seems probable, and most people close to the situation look more toward July for a settlement date. However, as one faculty union member said, a settlement will not come "at any cost."

"Going downhill"

A second concern of faculty is the quality of education at UMass, and what effect administration action in contract talks will have on that quality. Faculty union members see themselves as organizing to protect the integrity of the university through their efforts.

"One point is really critical to make," Marsh said. "The university is really going downhill, and rather rapidly. It's because in the 1960's, when there was lots of money, it was growing. There was lots of money and lots of enthusiasm.

"When money tightened in the 1970's and the brakes were put on, things began to decline," he said. "The university is not getting the support it needs to keep competitive with other universities.

"The indifference by the administration to the faculty's needs and wants hurts us," Marsh said.

"Unless things turn around in a hurry, this will become a third-rate university."

Administrators again differ.

"I know we are very concerned with the quality of education," Tillona said. "If what they (the MSP) say is true, then we have common concerns."

"A bloated administration"

"What we see is a tremendously bloated administration," Marsh said. "They would rather hire another administrator than help the faculty when a problem arises."

"We see no noticeable increase in our teaching resources," he said.

As an example, Marsh offered his own Plant and Soil Science dept. "We need more teaching assistants," he said.

Administration officials do not share the same view.

"I don't know what would make them say that," Tillona said. "When you consider the number of administrators who are former faculty members, and the number who will continue to be asked to do so in the future, I don't really see it that way."

Tillona said she had no specific figures to back up her statement.

Hard to attract new people

Marsh said because of tight budgetary matters, UMass cannot attract new faculty members, and that this hurts educational quality.

"The mobile staff is leaving," he said. "Three people from my department left two years ago at a 40-50 percent increase in salary.

"It is difficult to attract new people," Marsh said. "This is why I say the university is going to hell."

Tillona said she could not comment on that charge.

"I couldn't comment on what success the various departments have had," she said. "I could say some departments are recruiting quite successfully, but that would just be in the ones I know."

Final answer elusive

The final answer to all the so-called "problems" will perhaps ultimately lie with the settlement of the first contract, for when that contract is signed, each side should have a clear idea of its role and responsibilities.

MSP plan for grades

Here is the procedure by which the Massachusetts Society of Professors is considering withholding grades. The MSP's executive board last week authorized the board to proceed "as it sees fit" concerning the grades.

1) Grades will be turned in for graduating seniors, students transferring to other schools or the UMass Stockbridge school of Agriculture, graduate students, exchange students, and students whose financial aid is dependent on grades.

2) Copies of all other students grades will be turned in to the MSP office. Original grade sheets will be turned in blank to Whitmore and OSCAR, UMass' infamous computer.

3) If the union bargaining group reports to the executive board, the administration is bargaining in good faith and progress is being made, the grades will be turned in as is usually done.

"Just Another Boring Show" is anything but....

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Ed Lewin has his fingers on the pulse of the nation.

The Master of Fine Arts degree candidate has combined a heart-felt beat with talent to create a decadent, daring art show on display this week in Southwest's Hampden Art Gallery. "Just Another Boring Show" is Lewin's ceramic tribute to the businessman, "the contemporary god," and the holy rituals of his fast-food world.

Using earthenware clay to make "visual statements," Lewin offers up little businessmen "and their icons" for public consideration. Doll figures and bananas arranged in a variety of configurations on clay drums stand upon gleaming, white pedestals in the gallery.

The drums are replicas of altar bowls used by the Pueblo Indians and handcrafted by primitive firing methods. The hard finish of the pieces was accomplished by applying "terra sigletta," a coating used by the artisans of Ancient Rome.

On one "altar,' bananas in the adoring postures of the Three Wise Men circle a small gold-painted nude. Another hallowed surface holds a businessman bearing a gold-painted McDonald's coffee stirrer in place of a crozier, or 'Bishop's staff.'

In addition to these sacred scenarios are clay plates adorned with colorful dollar signs and accountants' scribbles. Ceramic bananas hang like so many fatted calfs from the gallery's rafters. The artistic images are ideas Lewin gathered from "The Wall Street Journal and bed."

Sharing the Gallery's rooms with Lewin's objects of idolatry are the creations of another university artist. The white t-shirts of bachelor of fine arts candidate Moss May dangle before Gallery windows from ropes anchored in the ceiling. "They're made from cloth," he explained to visitors yesterday, "then dipped in clay slip. I fired the clay until none of the cloth remained." May's white wonders range from seemingly real articles of clothing to framed prints based on bits of cheesecloth.

"Just Another Boring Show" will be on display today through May 19. Gallery hours are from 4—7 p.m. daily.

Patient remains 'fair' after riding accident

UMass junior Jeannie White was in fair condition last night after being thrown from a horse on North East Street Saturday, according to officials at Providence Hospital in Holyoke.

White, a Sigma Kappa sorority student, received head injuries and had to have a blood clot removed from her brain, hospital officials said.

Campus reacts to new prexy

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
and BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Reaction from top UMass-Amherst officials was varied last night to the selection of Cornell University Provost David A. Knapp as new University president.

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday selected Knapp to succeed Robert C. Wood as permanent UMass president. Wood resigned January 1 and Franklin K. Patterson has served as interim president since then.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery — "no comment."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, himself a candidate for the presidency, was unavailable for comment. The three UMass vice-chancellors each expressed different reaction.

Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said he wasn't surprised Knapp was selected by the trustees. He said he thought either Knapp or Bromery would be named.

"Those things are always hard," Woodbury said. "But I wasn't surprised."

"He has academic experience and he's a 'university man,'" Woodbury said of Knapp. "That's good."

Woodbury said one of the major tasks facing Knapp will be in the area of finance.

"The major thing we need is more financial support to recoup cutbacks of the last few years.

Acting Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Jeremiah M. Allen said he favored Bromery for the post, but Knapp was a good selection.

"I made no secret of the fact I was supporting Bill Bromery," Allen said. "Of the outside candidates, Knapp was clearly the most qualified. I think the trustees made the right decision if it had to be anyone but Bill Bromery."

Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance James L. McBee was not informed of the trustees' decision when contacted last night, and had no immediate comment.

"I have not yet met the man and I have never seen his resume," McBee said. "Therefore, I have no reaction."

Senate budget axes RSO funds

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night passed a revised budget authored by Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima which significantly decreased or even eliminated funding for all but three RSO groups.

However the budget will be reviewed again on Wednesday night because of pressure exerted on DeLima by Third World representatives who were angered because the vote was taken when they were meeting outside of the room.

Included on the budget, which was passed in its entirety during the 55-minute session, was elimination of all funding of the UMass Federal Credit Union. The funding was considered a necessity for future operation by the bank's Board of Directors.

"We feel we were dealt with in bad faith," Stanley Kinard, a spokesman for the Third World Caucus said last night. "I would think it's unconstitutional and illegal that a budget act would be passed without Third World representation," he said.

In a statement issued last night, the Third World Caucus called the senate "totally unresponsive to the needs of the Third World Community," and questioned the validity of the vote which they believe was taken without a quorum.

Shortly after a confrontation with Michael Jackson, a spokesman for the Third World Community, DeLima said, "I was thinking in terms of passing the budget. This is the biggest mistake I ever made in my life. This is insensitivity toward the Third World Community."

The Board of Directors of the Credit Union also met last night to discuss measures to be taken in light of their cut of funds. The board felt they were unable to present their views at the meeting and said the Credit Union will suffer without the revenue.

"They do not support an organization which serves 4000 students on campus," board member Kevin Falvey said in a late night board meeting last night. He said services would have to be eliminated if these funds were not obtained.

President of the Credit Union Anne Smith said yesterday, prior to the vote, "It's like the student government saying 'Hey, we don't want a credit union on campus, we want a commercial bank.'"

"The senate and Brian DeLima are not interested in making the investment to service the community," board member Reid Frazier said.

Peter Bloom, ex-president of the credit union, questioned the validity of the quorum with the Third World community missing. He also felt that their view was not represented. "There was not a chance for anybody to say anything," he said.

Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Sundstrom also appeared on the senate floor to debate the fifteen thousand dollar cut in the paper's budget. "It constitutes a considerable decrease in the quantity and quality of the paper," he told the senators last night.

After the budget was approved, Sundstrom said, "considering the rising costs of publishing a newspaper, the cut they gave us was irresponsible and displayed their ignorance of the financial needs of the newspaper."

Also passed at the senate meeting was an amendment to the S.G.A. constitution about election rules. The amendment provided for a run-off election between the two top Presidential candidacies if no president was elected during the first popular election. The amendment eliminates the currently used electoral convention process.

Disagreement abounds on Greek co-op budget

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

University administrators and members of an independent cooperative food distributor for the campus Greek system are disagreeing on the financial conditions of the co-op, but no one would quote figures proving the solvency or indebtedness of the operation.

Director of Greek Affairs Shannon Ellis and Dean of Students William F. Field said there is at least a $5,000 debt existing in the co-op's operating budget, citing a $5,000 bounced check issued by the Fraternity Management Association, an independent student-run group that provides food, heating and household supplies to several fraternities and sororities.

But the co-op president, Robert Mullens of Delta Chi fraternity, and treasurer Gerry Collins said the financial status of the co-op is "stable," and said Ellis lead the co-op on to believe the University would assist the group if its salaried director was forced to resign.

Both Mullens and Collins, though, would not specify what kind of "stable" condition the finances of the co-op are in, and also could not specify what kind of assistance Ellis said UMass would offer.

Ellis last night denied she asked co-op members to push co-op manager Joseph Sexton out of his job, and Sexton also denies he was eased out.

Ellis said several vendors have called her asking about payments for food and other goods delivered to sororities and fraternities.

Ellis said there is a "definite possibility" the co-op would fold, but Mullens and Sexton both said the co-op is not in danger of folding.

Ellis said the co-op owed "at least $5,000" and would not reveal any other figures concerning the operation. Ellis said some co-op checks have bounced citing one for $5,000 specifically. Mullens said he knew nothing of bounced checks or the $5,000 figure.

Sexton, when told Ellis and Field questioned the financial stability of the co-op, said they are "over reacting" because "We've got over $80,000 coming in from national sororities and fraternities that would put us solvent."

Sexton, whose resignation became effective May 1, also said he doesn't know what is going on with the co-op because he had been out sick with back trouble in the fall semester and did not work after April 15 this semester.

Sexton said by September, whether or not the co-op would be financially solvent, he would "blow the roof off Whitmore," by telling the press "the whole story."

"I'll deny everything I just told you," Sexton told the Collegian. "Bob Mullens is the only one you should be talking to about this."

Early yesterday afternoon Ellis, a voting member of the co-ops Board of Directors, said she did not know exactly what the state of the co-op's finances were and did not want a story in the Collegian "to cause panic" in the Greek system. Thirteen houses get all supplies through the co-op, while four or five houses receive only certain things through the association.

Ellis said she and Field have been trying to figure out what and where the problem is in the co-op, if any. "Nobody knows what's going on," Ellis said.

Ways & Means hears higher-ed lobbyists

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts state Senate Ways and Means committee yesterday entertained a parade of witnesses from public education appealing for boosts above their allocations in the $5 billion House budget approved last week.

The committee was holding the last of its hearings before making its final budget recommendations to the Senate for floor debate.

A contingent representing "Students United for Public Education" also appeared to protest any cuts in higher education allowances.

Led by Rona Weiss of Northampton and the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, the group also objected to any state scholarship funds for students attending private colleges.

Sens. Kelly, John Olver, D-Amherst, and William L. Saltonstall, R-Manchester, argued with the delegation at length, contending money spent in the private sector was "more cost-effective."

Olver said both the private and public sector of higher education are important to the state. He said that the $9 million in scholarships to students in private schools opened additional spaces for students in the public institutions.

The visitors, who included Robert Laverty of Chicopee and the Westfield State College, said they wanted legislators to make a 100 percent "and not an 80 percent or a 90 percent" commitment to public higher education.

Kelly said the committee would not automatically grant state schools the funds they sought. He complained, without giving specifics, that a few years ago UMass paid a faculty member $45,000 for teaching only two hours a week.

Kelly also cited a wide discrepancy in net state costs at the different public institutions. He said the per student cost to taxpayers at UMass, Amherst, was $2,896, and at Westfield State College, $1,532. He said these expenditures do not include funds for capital costs or some fringe benefits, particularly pensions.

Patricia Hearst

Hearst's freedom ends; she prepares for prison

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] — An "extremely depressed" Patricia Hearst spent her last hours of freedom yesterday preparing to return to prison to complete her seven-year sentence for federal bank robbery.

U.S. Attorney G. William Hunter said Miss Hearst, 24, was to surrender at the minimum-security prison facility at Pleasanton, 30 miles east of San Francisco.

Miss Hearst, free for 18 months while unsuccessfully appealing her conviction, will have to spend at least 14 months there before being eligible for parole next year.

Miss Hearst reportedly spent the past week at San Simeon, the fabled coastal estate built by her late grandfather, newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst, 200 miles south of her suburban Hillsborough home.

The Times of San Mateo quoted unidentified family sources as saying Miss Hearst was especially concerned because all but 15 days of her previous 14 months in custody were spent in solitary confinement.

During her previous incarceration, Miss Hearst spent several weeks at the campus-like Pleasanton facility but was transferred to a San Diego prison after her attorney, Al Johnson, complained of threats on her life.

She was freed on $1 million bail in November 1976, eight months after she was convicted of joining her Symbionese Liberation Army kidnappers in an April 1974 armed holdup of a quiet residential branch of the Hibernia bank in San Francisco.

While free on bail, Miss Hearst was protected by private security guards and kept a low public profile.

Last March 24, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review her conviction, and District Court Judge William Orrick Jr., in a secret agreement with her attorneys, declined to modify his seven-year sentence.

Miss Hearst has cooperated with authorities since her September 1975 arrest in San Francisco. She is scheduled to testify for the prosecution when SLA members William and Emily Harris go on trial in October in Oakland on charges of kidnapping her. At the time of her kidnapping, Miss Hearst was an art student at the University of California at Berkeley.

The Harrises, among the few remaining survivors of the tiny band of revolutionaries that gained international attention with the Feb. 4, 1974, abduction, were her companions during her 19 months as a kidnap victim and fugitive.

Miss Hearst was captured in San Francisco in September 1975. At her two-month trial, she tearfully recalled her life on the run, saying the Harrises threatened her and instilled in her a fear of the FBI. She testified her captors told her she would be killed if she refused to participate in the bank robbery, which netted the terrorists $10,960.

Gay legislation left with states

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court refused yesterday to call into question the authority of states to outlaw homosexual acts between consenting adults.

The court, with two justices disagreeing, left untouched North Carolina's sodomy law over arguments that it violates the privacy rights of homosexuals.

Civil liberties lawyers had urged the justices to use the case to study for the first time in more than a decade the rights of homosexuals.

Returning from its last two-week recess of a term scheduled to end June 19, the court handed down hundreds of orders and several decisions. In other matters, the court:

—Agreed in a New York case to decide whether states may refuse to hire resident aliens as public school teachers. Past Supreme Court decisions have barred states from discriminating against aliens in various occupations, but last March 22 the court said states may refuse to hire aliens as state police officers.

Also yesterday, the justices left invalidated a New York law that had barred aliens from practicing medicine unless they become naturalized citizens. They also sent back to California for more study in light of the alien state troopers' decision a ruling that state and local governments may not bar aliens from becoming probation officers.

—Ruled by a 6-3 vote that state courts may intervene in labor disputes involving alleged illegal picketing on private property. Since 1959, state courts have had little authority to intervene in such matters if the National Labor Relations Board might become involved.

—Split 7-1 in a major decision on Indian tribal sovereignty that tribes are immune from civil suits alleging sex discrimination.

—Told a Moylan, Pa., Quaker who from 1969 to 1972 withheld portions of his federal income taxes as "war crime deductions" that he has to pay those back taxes.

Yale refuses to dismiss alleged Bakke supporter

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Yale University yesterday rejected a demand from a group of students that an admissions officer be fired for allegedly encouraging Allan Bakke to file his white-discrimination lawsuit.

More than 30 demonstrators, some of them black, rallied Wednesday outside Yale's School of Organization and Management calling for dismissal of Peter C. Storandt.

But William J. Donaldson, dean of the school, said in a statement released yesterday that Storandt had "highly favorable recommendations" from schools where he held admissions posts.

"Although he has been at Yale for less than three months, his performance has been wholly satisfactory," he added.

The demonstrators claimed that when Storandt was an admissions officer at the University of California at Davis Medical School in the early 1970s, he urged Bakke to file a court challenge after the school rejected his application.

In the statement, Donaldson did not mention the claim that Storandt had counseled Bakke.

Soviet dissident leader states his defense at the opening of trial

MOSCOW [AP] — Yuri Orlov, founder of the Soviet Union's best known dissident group, was allowed to make a statement defending himself at the opening of his trial yesterday his wife Irina said.

"I refuse to take part in the proceedings if you don't let me speak," Mrs. Orlov quoted her husband as saying. The trial was closed to foreign reporters.

Mrs. Orlov, who was allowed to attend with her two sons, told reporters outside the courthouse her husband was accused of sending slanderous information to Western embassies and correspondents and getting paid for it.

Mrs. Orlov said her husband, founder of the "Helsinki" human rights group, defended himself by saying he was motivated by humanitarian and not political concerns.

Orlov founded the group to uphold the provisions of the Helsinki Agreement, a statement signed in 1975 by 33 nations that froze postwar European borders and supported human rights.

"Yuri's defense was brilliant," said his lawyer, Yevgeny Shalman. "He was more polite than anyone there."

Shalman said Orlov's statement lasted for about 1½ hours. The trial is scheduled to continue today with the questioning of witnesses for the prosecution. Orlov named a dozen witnesses he wanted to call to his defense, Mrs. Orlov said.

Besides barring Western journalists and Orlov's supporters, Soviet authorities refused to allow Nobel Peace Prize winner and fellow dissident Andrei Sakharov to attend the proceedings. U.S. Embassy First Secretary Richard E. Combs, who came as an observer, was also kept from entering the courthouse, which was surrounded by dozens of uniformed and plainclothes policemen.

The official Tass news agency said Orlov was accused of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda," a charge which carries a maximum penalty of seven years in a labor camp plus five years of internal exile. Tass said Orlov admitted writing and distributing documents which "contain fabrications, smearing the Soviet state and social system."

Senate endorses Carter's arms sale

WASHINGTON — Senate leaders check the tally sheet after the 54-44 vote to reject the resolution to disapprove the arms sale to Saudia Arabia, Egypt, and Israel. From left to right: Sen. Henry Jackson, Sen. Frank Church, and Senate majority leader Robert Byrd.

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate last night endorsed President Carter's plan to sell jet fighters to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia — transactions the president called vital to achieving peace in the Middle East.

On a vote of 55 to 43 the Senate rejected a resolution which would have blocked the $5 billion arms sales package. Opponents to the sales would have needed majorities in both the House and Senate to prevent them.

The administration had lobbied hard in favor of the sales.

Carter spoke by telephone yesterday morning with several senators of both parties "stressing...the importance" of the vote, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said. The president also talked with a number of senators by telephone during the weekend.

In a letter to all senators in the final days before the vote, Carter warned that rejection of the sales would be a "devastating blow" to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and his efforts to negotiate a peace agreement with Israel.

"Shall we support and give confidence to those in the Middle East who work for moderation and peace?" wrote Carter. "Or shall we turn them aside, shattering their confidence in us and serving the cause of radicalism."

But Sens. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and Clifford Case, R-N.J., responded in a letter of their own, distributed to senators yesterday, in which they argued that the sales "will only make it more difficult to revitalize the peace process."

Church, Case and Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., were among the leaders of the opposition to the sales.

Sarbanes at one point accused the administration of provoking a needless and divisive confrontation which could have been avoided through "adroit and skillful statesmanship."

But as the debate continued yesterday, a Carter victory began to emerge. Even Church at one point several hours before the vote said "I am told that the sales will be approved."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., had predicted the Senate would support Carter.

Debate on the sales lasted through the day, including a two-hour secret session held to discuss classified reports on the military implications of the transactions.

The sales would send 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s to Israel; 60 F-15s to Saudi Arabia and 50 less sophisticated F-5Es to Egypt.

Zaire invaded; rebels capture city

ZAIRE [AP] — An invasion army of 4,000 exiled tribesmen drove toward the heart of Zaire's southeastern Shaba province yesterday after seizing part of a mining center and a smaller town from government troops, according to reports reaching Belgium and Zambia.

In Washington, the State Department said it was considering evacuating the estimated 100 U.S. citizens in the area of the fighting.

Reliable Belgian sources in Brussels said the invading Katangans who crossed into Zaire from Zambia late last week had entered the copper-mining city of Kolwezi, 25 miles north of the border with Zambia. The sources said rebels took Mutshatsha, 60 miles west of Kolwezi. Diplomatic sources in Zambia confirmed these reports.

The Belgian sources said many of the rebel Lunda tribesmen were ex-policemen driven into Angola in the early 1960s after a secessionist movement was crushed in Shaba, then known as Katanga. They said the rebels were moving north toward the city of Kamina and its Zairean army base in the middle of the province.

Shaba was known as Katanga when Zaire was the Belgian Congo. The colony gained independence from Belgium in 1960 and has been ruled since 1965 by President Mobutu Sese Seko.

His troops — aided by Moroccan soldiers, U.S. equipment and French airlifts — drove back a similar invasion by between 2,000 and 5,000 Katangans from Marxist-ruled Angola last May after two months of fighting. The 1977 incursion reached the Kolwezi area, 310 miles east of the Angolan border, but fell short of the city itself.

Belgian sources said sporadic clashes continued in the year before the new invasion, this time reportedly launched through the northwest corner of Zambia instead of directly from Angola. Zambian government officials have refused comment on the invasion. Angola says it had nothing to do with it.

Zaire's embassy in Brussels said there had been see-saw fighting for Mutshatsha over the weekend, but it was currently in the hands of government troops. The embassy said Zairean forces had retaken the town using heavy artillery.

Italy's vote swings to the right

ROME [AP] — Initial returns yesterday from local elections pointed to a strong conservative backlash to the wave of leftist terror in Italy that last week claimed the life of former Premier Aldo Moro.

As the violence continued, an auto company executive was shot and seriously wounded yesterday in Bologna by Red Brigades gunmen — the tenth shooting victim in the past eight days.

The Christian Democrat Party — led by Moro until his kidnapping and assassination by the Red Brigades — appeared to be raking in a strong sympathy vote, while the Communists seemed to be losing support of voters who associated the leftist party with the radical-Marxist terrorists.

Ironically the Communists, parliamentary partners with the ruling Christian Democrats, had joined the government in its rejection of Red Brigades demands that jailed terrorists be freed in exchange for Moro. The bullet-riddled body of the former premier, who was kidnapped in a Rome street ambush March 16, was found in Rome last Tuesday.

The Brigades have denounced the Communists for aligning with the government.

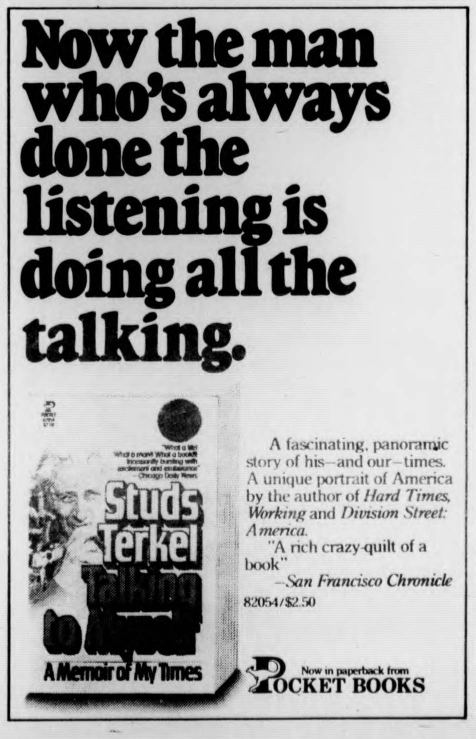
Polls closed yesterday afternoon in most of the more than 800 localities where 3.8 million persons — 10 per cent of the national total — were eligible to vote. Higher than expected turnouts were reported in almost every precinct, with the average put at 91.9 per cent.

With 10 per cent of 4,430 polling places reporting, the Christian Democrats had 43.6 per cent, the Communists 26.9, the Socialists 12.8 and the neo-Fascists 4.3.

For the Christian Democrats this was a gain of 7.6 per cent over the last local elections in 1974 and 5.6 per cent over national elections in 1976. The Communists dropped 1.5 per cent from the previous local elections and 10 per cent from the 1976 vote.

The respected Doxa polling organization projected the Christian Democrats would take 41.6 per cent of the vote compared to 38.9 in the national elections and 36.6 per cent in the local balloting, and the Communists would win 26.7 per cent compared to 35.6 per cent at the national level and 25.3 per cent in local balloting.

The Communists' strong showing in the national vote virtually forced the Christian Democrats into the parliamentary alliance engineered by Moro just before his abduction.



Now the man who's always done the listening is doing all the talking.

A fascinating, panoramic story of his—and our—times. A unique portrait of America by the author of Hard Times, Working and Division Street: America.

Recount halts probe of Mass. tax dept.

BOSTON [AP] — In a surprise vote that the majority leadership quickly squelched, the House yesterday briefly favored an independent probe of the state Tax Department.

The special commission investigation, demanded by Rep. Frank Hatch, R-Beverly, won an initial victory, 110-105, only to see that wiped out on a subsequent 116-93 reconsideration tally. Hatch has complained for months of a serious scandal in the operation of the agency.

The commission would appoint a special prosecutor with broad investigatory powers.

Hatch battled for this instead of the alternative approach recommended by the Tax action Committee and prominent Democrats which would give Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti subpoena powers to undertake his own investigation.

Between the roll calls, Rep. Vincent J. Piro, D-Somerville, had warned colleagues that a vote against reconsideration "is a vote against the attorney general of this commonwealth."

Hatch said Bellotti had investigated the agency for 18 months and said he was terminating it because employees declined to cooperate. He said he did not then seek subpoena powers, nor did he seek to utilize the subpoena powers of a grand jury.

Crime unit probes commodities swindle

HARTFORD [AP] — Evidence of an alleged commodities swindle by a Boston man wanted in several states is being turned over to the Economic Crime Unit for possible prosecution, a state lawyer said yesterday.

The case involves Alan Abrahams, who is accused of running Lloyd Carr and Co. of Boston under the alias of James A. Carr and setting up offices in Greenwich, Stamford and in several other states.

Witnesses appearing at a hearing before the state Banking Department claimed the company sold more than $1 million worth of commodities futures in Connecticut in recent years, department counsel Brian Wolf said.

The unit must decide whether to file charges after investigating the case.

Abrahams was arrested in Florida earlier this year after he allegedly jumped bail in Massachusetts while awaiting prosecution on charges related to commodities sales there.

A half-dozen of the Lloyd Carr salesmen and several office workers testified before a department hearing officer, Wolf said. Some of them were granted transaction immunity, protecting them against prosecution in return for their testimony.

Twenty-two investors who "lost almost all of their funds" in commodities purchases submitted affidavits, Wolf said.

Abrahams, who is in custody, did not testify.

The department turns over evidence to investigators whenever it believes there may be a criminal violation. The unit is one of the chief state's attorney's investigative branches.

Boston patriarch dies in city hospital

BOSTON [AP] — Ralph Lowell, a Boston banker, philanthropist and founder of the country's first educational television station, is dead at the age of 87.

Lowell, also a patriarch of Boston society, died yesterday morning at Faulkner Hospital.

He made his primary mark in the business world as president and later chairman of the board of the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co. In 1967, at the age of 77, Poor's Register of Corporations, Directors and Executives listed Lowell as the officer or director of 44 corporations and institutions.

"My life's philosophy is a very simple one," Lowell once wrote. "Most of us are given a great deal, in one way or another, and I believe it is our duty and privilege to return that bounty to our fellow man in whatever way our talents direct us."

Lowell, the epitome of the "Proper Bostonian" began his business career some 70 years ago, addressing envelopes for $4 a week at a Boston brokerage house. A few years later, Lowell moved to the First National Bank as secretary to the president.

Lowell's fiscal prowess is exemplified by the growth of the Lowell Fund for Assisting Students at Harvard College. When he took over in 1922 as manager of the fund, it was worth $238,000. When he turned it over to Harvard in 1959, the fund had grown to $2,104,000.

Is Tsongas in now that O'Neill is out?

BOSTON [UPI] — What makes Tommy not run?

Observers around the Statehouse seared furiously yesterday for the reality behind Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill's decision to stand pat, to run for another four years in the deadening No. 2 spot behind Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and to bypass a challenge against Sen. Edward M. Brooke, R-Mass.

In the final analysis, after five tumultuous days of testing the waters and of having friend and foe alike declare his candidacy for him, O'Neill ran head on into the facts of life.

Brooke would not be a pushover, no matter that the current public opinion polls show him nearly even with O'Neill, and the strong possibility remained that O'Neill would lose.

Sure the polls showed Brooke slipping and Tom gaining, said Beryl Cohen, a former representative and one of the half dozen close O'Neill advisers who met with him Saturday, Decision Day.

But Brooke hasn't shown us the real Brooke yet. And remember, Tom never had poll information showing he could win, Cohen said.

O'Neill telephoned Dukakis Saturday afternoon to tell him he had decided against the Senate fight and was going to run for re-election. Dukakis abruptly cut short the conversation and told O'Neill they would discuss the issue face to face that evening.

That night, over coffee at O'Neill's Beacon Hill home, O'Neill repeated the news and he said, Mike said, I'm glad to hear it.

Dukakis, who has gotten good service out of O'Neill, was on the verge of recruiting Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt to replace O'Neill. Delahunt was appointed by Dukakis.

Dukakis, however, was not among the intimates who counselled O'Neill. That group consisted of Cohen, state Transportation Secretary Frederick Salvucci, O'Neill's wife, Jackie, and his family, including House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. D-Mass.

O'Neill's decision clears the way for Rep. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., to enter the race.

India will indict ex-prime minister

NEW DELHI, India [UPI] — The government indicated yesterday it will take legal action against former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi for misusing her authority during 21 months of emergency rule.

In a parallel move, the government introduced a constitutional amendment bill in parliament stipulating that in the future authorities cannot declare an internal emergency unless there is war or armed rebellion.

The government said it would take action against Mrs. Gandhi and other officials who a judicial commission found guilty of abusing their power during the emergency regime.

Prime Minister Morarji Desai presented two interim reports by the commission, which was chaired by former Chief Justice Jayantilal C. Shah.

The commission was appointed by the government a year ago and started public hearings last September. It is expected to submit its final report in July or August.

Besides saying Mrs. Gandhi was guilty of misusing her power, the commission denounced her 31-year-old son, Sanjay, for "wielding unlimited powers in a dictatorial manner without even the slightest right.... except that he was the son of the then prime minister of India."

The commission's findings are recommendations, leaving the job of prosecution to the government.

'Decoding a hobby' insists spy suspect

ALEXANDRIA, Va. [UPI] — Vietnamese expatriate David Truong admitted at his espionage trial yesterday that he made a hobby of reading books on spying and cryptograms but denied he ever spied for Hanoi.

Truong, 32, was cross-examined about spy books, papers on espionage and a notebook listing some 30 books on cryptography that FBI agents found in his apartment following his arrest Jan. 31.

He said he wanted to study cryptography — the science of written codes — because of his pasttime of solving cryptograms.

"They are just like crossword puzzles," Truong said.

Truong and Ronald Humphrey, a former U.S. Information Agency official, are charged with conspiring to send a mass of classified State Department cables to Hanoi agents in Paris.

If convicted of the most serious charges against them, they face maximum life sentences.

White House guard admits 8 women

WASHINGTON [UPI] — At least eight women will be in the formerly all-male White House military honor guard for arrival ceremonies Wednesday honoring President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, it was announced yesterday.

First Lady Rosalynn Carter, who supported eliminating the all-male status, said she was "gratified by the willingness of the services to correct an imbalance in the ranks of their ceremonial units."

A spokesman for the Military District of Washington, which is run by the Army, said the honor guard of about 230 will include eight servicemen, two from the Army, five from the Air Force and one from the Navy.

He said there was a possibility that one member of the Coast Guard and one from the Marine Corps might be added to the list.

Iranian police beat protesters

TEHRAN, Iran [UPI] — Riot police beat student protesters with truncheons yesterday and soldiers took up positions across Tehran to crush a general strike. The government warned it would crack down on spreading unrest that has killed at least 15 people in the past week.

Police raided the campus of Tehran's main university and broke up a crowd of 1,000 students demanding to see the chancellor to discuss a list of complaints.

They cut off a group of about 200 demonstrators and — backed by troops carrying machine guns — marched them into the streets and began beating them with batons and truncheons until they dispersed.

Across the city, soldiers with fixed bayonets took up positions in key intersections and riot police armed with teargas patrolled the downtown area to suppress a general strike called by opponents of the Shah.

Scores of army recovery vehicles took up positions around major buildings, including the parliament, presumably to prevent road blocks of burned cars.

Early in the day, tanks and armored personnel carriers rolled into the streets in a show of force but later were withdrawn.

Many of Tehran's frightened residents — including the large foreign community — stayed off the streets. Foreigners were heeding employers' warnings to avoid all forms of ground transportation and their community schools were closed.

The work stoppage fizzled for the most part but took hold in the grand bazaar area, center of the Moslem clergy's growing power among orthodox Iranians angered by the Shah's modernization programs.

Anti-government protesters also have been demanding wide-ranging economic and social reforms.

Top government officials met to discuss the rioting and Information Minister Dariush Homayun later announced a crackdown on dissidents.

"The government is in full control of the situation and has taken, and will take, all necessary preventive steps. But people must ignore the baseless rumors and the futile psychological warfare being waged by the miscreants," Homayun said.

from our perspective

Recently there have been reports and rumors of a number of assaults and rapes on campus. While it seems more likely that the prevalence of these reports represents growing concern over the problem rather than an actual increase in the number of incidents, the fact remains that women have reason to be concerned about being alone on campus, particularly at night.

Women should not have to be afraid to walk alone on campus at any time of day. With proper security measures, a community safe for everyone is a goal that can be achieved, and one which ought to be a high priority of this university.

There are a number of things that can be done to improve the present situation. Poor lighting is a chronic hazard, particularly around Franklin and Worcester Dining Commons, and along the path from Curry-Hicks Cage to Berkshire house. In addition to replacing a few light bulbs, more lights ought to be installed in these and other areas.

Another problem is the paucity of campus security patrols. Occasional cruises along the periphery of the campus do not provide adequate security for a largely pedestrian population; foot patrols are needed in areas such as those mentioned above.

In the meantime, some kind of campus escort service should be established. Perhaps a phone-in service could be coordinated through area governments or area women's (and men's) centers. Until such a thing can be done, we urge people to watch out for each other. Campus security is everybody's business.

Women need conscience raising

To the Editor:

Now that the Women's Pages controversy is finally over and the weary participants on both sides have had time to rest, I find myself wondering just what they see when they look back on their actions of the past two weeks.

To the Women's Editor, who spearheaded the take-over, I ask: what do you see you have accomplished for this campus? A great leap for womankind? I understand that the women's movement means just that — continuous growth here and there across the country, wherever women's equality is lagging. For this reason I applaud the cause. I have met up with men who tried to patronize me or ignored me, consciously or unconsciously, when I have expressed myself intellectually. But I have been lucky — the really harmful effects of a largely male-run society have left me unscathed. I know others who are not so fortunate.

I have heard that Ms. Melrose is writing a book this summer. I'm sure it will contain many behind the scenes gaps in news coverage. I'd put my money on it [if I had any]. I'm sure the publisher is. During the occupation I felt that some degree of "news management" was being exercised by the Collegian. Be it a protective measure to keep the paper safely running or to keep the news coverage as calm as possible, I did sense a "hollowness" in the stories, as if the reporters were writing under instructions not to tell the whole story.

What really disturbs me here are those who rose to prominence and power during the struggle for women's pages on this campus. A friend once said that people are "practicing" here, trying out the old flappers to see if they work. If this is true, then the recent controversy was a success — it sure caused a flap.

The quest for power doesn't disturb me; it's exhilarating and as worthy a human occupation as any — but I believe it should be earned. Taking over an office of busines, [the Collegian takes a large share of its income from ads] by force is unfair and uncivilized. The potential danger of other groups taking similar action is certainly destructive to the Collegian's role as a newspaper in America, ostensibly protected by the First Amendment to print freely.

As to your tactics, the climate you created on campus during your occupation hurt your cause more than helped it. A Boston politician is now going to be reviewed by the Massachusetts House Ethics Committee for her thinly disguised threats to the Chancellor and the Collegian Editor to comply with her own feminist ideology [she was working on the UMass budget at the time!] This gross abuse of power should carefully be considered by all involved, not just the women, but by the Collegian managers and by all students.

A little power is a dangerous thing. It can be addictive and then look out — it's not just the cause anymore, the issue begins to fade and the person[s] behind it who are supposed to be looking out for the good of all are looking out for themselves. It has always been this way. Vested interests, personal edification — this is human nature and I don't think it can be changed. But don't, I repeat because it is very important, don't delude yourself into thinking you are doing it for others, unless it has never crossed your mind what you can get out of it — be it a job, notoriety or just self-satisfaction. To thine ownself be true.

With all the consciousness-raising going on on campus, I feel it's time for some personal conscience-raising.

What is in a wall?

To the Editor:

Seeing as how you are a diverse group, and for this you command my unprecedented attention and respect, I have thought it wise to pose a question for your thorough investigation. I shall attempt to contemplate it in this letter, in hopes that you might be able to expand and expound upon it. My comprehension is limited and seeing as how you assume intelligence, I should hope you could enlighten me. Please direct yourself to the following:

If the case is such that being "off the wall" is an undesirable condition of existence, is it implicit in this well known phrase that the proper place to exist, is on the wall? The implications of this possible conclusion are devastating..

What is in a wall? I assert that it is that which exists in the brain. If being on the wall does not make a person part of the wall, thus existing as an immovable mass of rock, how does one achieve atonement with one's brain?

We can only be further from the wall if we choose to be up against it. If the wall is that which upholds our brains or perhaps, holds up our brains, we then must be up against our brains as we exist up against the wall.

This is certainly food for thought, but fuel has no place in the wall except for its construction, which precludes historical investigation, which might be considered communistic, we shall discount it altogether.

My point is clear I'm sure. Manifest in being off the wall, is the understanding that it is, in fact, the proper place to exist.

Support African Liberation Day

To the Editor:

For the past six years, the end of May has marked the time of international support for the people of Africa in their struggle for liberation — African Liberation Day. This year's plans are set for Philadelphia on May 20 where students, workers and community organizers have formed the May 20th Coalition. They will march under the banner, "Fight Imperialism and National Oppression from the U.S.A. to the U.S.A. [Union of South Africa]."

Already students have become a part of the international movement to isolate the racist apartheid government of South Africa, as campaigns against university investments grow bigger and stronger every month. And thousands of students protested South Africa's participation in the Davis Cup in Nashville this spring. As this movement has grown, the American multinational corporations and Carter's "human rights" government have been exposed for their role in backing the white minority regimes.

Right now, the streets of Philly are the scene of some of sharpest systematic oppression of minority people, as Mayor Frank Rizzo continues to invade the Black community with his infamous police force. Hundreds of people have responded to the call to fight this oppression, and hundreds more have begun to link their struggle with the struggle in Africa. African Liberation Day is being called to strengthen both these movements and further expose the common enemy: the same system that supports the bantustans in South Africa and maintains the ghettos in our country.

Saturday night, following the demonstration, will feature an evening of Afro-American culture. The show will be highlighted by the appearance of Gil Scott-Heron. Sunday, the Revolutionary Student Brigade is holding a conference to talk about the struggle against this system and the role students can play in building a revolutionary movement. There will be speeches and workshops on building multinational unity, the strategy for revolution in the U.S., the role of the working class, socialism, and why revolution and socialism is the only way out for oppressed nationalities. And we will make plans for struggle over the summer and into the fall.

Join us May 20 for African Liberation Day, and May 21 for the conference. Bus tickets will cost $10-12, and will be leaving early Saturday morning, returning Sat. night and Sunday night. For more information, call 256-0501.

Senate disregards Third World

On Wednesday, May 10, 1978 the Speaker, the Treasurer, and Chairman of the Budgets Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate informed student senators that the senate had a deficit of $180,000. The Senate Third World Caucus was informed that it would have to share a portion of the responsibility for paying off this deficit. The Third World Caucus informed the Senate offices that it would meet and discuss the amount of the cuts each organization would incur.

After the Caucus met, it tentatively decided which organizations would incur cuts, subject to the review of those organizations which were not able to attend the first meeting. Then, on Monday, May 15, 1978, members of the Third World Caucus informed the speaker of the student senate, prior to the senate meeting of May 15, 1978, that it had not yet reached a decision on the nature of the budget cuts and would like to withdraw the amendment of May 10, 1978, with regard to budget cuts it would incur. While Third World senators and representatives of Third World organizations were caucusing and discussing these issues outside the senators room and during its meeting, senators present voted to approve the entire student senate budget and $18,000 worth of budget cuts for Third World organizations without a quorum, and then adjourned the meeting.

We deplore this action and categorically state that the student senate is totally unresponsive to the needs of the Third World Community. They have demonstrated that they do not regard the Third World Caucus as an integral part of the student community and university at large. This is a flagrant violation of our constitutional rights and all affirmative action guidelines that the student senate and university have developed. It is an affront to the Spirit of Cooperation and Compromise we thought existed between the Third World Community and the student senate. This is an extreme example of utter and total disrespect.

This action shall not go unchallenged. We now choose to exercise all strategies we feel we must use to ensure that the rights of Third World students are upheld and protected. We must guarantee that Third World students, faculty, staff and administrators will be able to control their future destinies on this campus. We will therefore take any and all actions deemed necessary to guarantee the long term survival of the Third World Community at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. We are aware of the fact that there are only two weeks of school left but this "slap in the face" must be dealt with in kind.

Jews—a common culture

By YITZHAK SANTIS

Many years ago, at the beginning of my life, I was told that I am a Jew, a member of the Jewish faith and that God created me, all the people and the whole earth. Being a person numbering in years about what I could count on one hand, I accepted this because that's what Mommy and Daddy told me.

Later on, at about a hand and two-fifths old, I was told I would be starting Hebrew school and learn to be a Jew so I could be 'Bar Mitzvahed'. I was so terribly excited that I jumped for joy, I would be 'Bar Mitzvahed' and be a man; a Jewish man!

Three years into Hebrew school and I saw it as a drag, a waste of time and a contradiction. Why couldn't I go out and play with all my friends about public school? Why am I told in Hebrew school that a Jew can't eat swine meat and every Sunday after Hebrew school you give me a ham sandwich? Aren't I a Jew? Aren't we Jews?

Six months before my Bar Mitzvah, the Cantor calls me into his office, "Yitzhak", he said, "it is time to start Bar Mitzvah lessons."

I jumped for joy, I was going to be a Bar Mitzvah boy, a Jewish man, and an end to Hebrew school!

My Bar Mitzvah came, as I performed the duties of a Jewish man when praying to God. I now had the full responsibility of Jewish life on my shoulders. Or did I? Didn't Mom and Dad still feed me ham and cheese sandwiches? Did we go to synogogue every Sabbath as responsible Jews should? Not really, well actually never. Did Mom ever light the Sabbath candles? No, she hardly, if ever, did.

Am I a Jew? Is there a God? Does it even matter? "I guess not," I said, "If I don't believe in God and if Judaism is just a religion and I am not religious then I am not really a Jew." This revelation at age three hands and a finger.

Came the time in my life for the first date. A Jewish girl? Naw, what's the difference, we are all Americans. Then the second date, the third, the fourth. Jewish? I guess not, like I asked before, does it really matter?

I graduate high school, start college life. A freshman at UMass! Well, what do college men do? They find college women.

"Hi, what's your name?"

"Maria".

"I'm Jeff," I said using my Anglicized name.

She wasn't Jewish, she was a Quaker and I am an atheist. How could I be a Jew? I am a modern man, living in the 20th century and religion was dying out, we are living in a secular age. So, we went out together.

"WOW!! This Quaker idea is great," I said excitedly to Dad.

He got very upset, he saw that I was lost to the Jewish people. "You'll never father Jewish children, they'll be beautiful kids," he assured me sadly, "but not Jewish."

"Boy is he old fashioned," I thought, "How else should I expect him to react if he wasn't liberal in thought or open to new ideas? Besides, my whole Jewish upbringing was hypocritical."

Maria and I split. I then realized that I was attracted to Quakerism only through her, that I really had no identity, no connection to a people or religion or cause. I was in the pits.

One day I picked up a book, Diaspora: A History of the Jews in Exile, Why not? I had nothing to lose by reading this dusty, old book.

"My God!", I shouted, jumping for joy when I finished the book, "We are a people, a nation, and I am a part of it!."

Another book, this time starting with the ancient Jews in Eretz Yisrael. Then another book on the same subject. This book on the Holocaust; that book on Zionism; this book on Jewish values; that book on the 1948 War of Independence; and the Book where it all ties in, the Humash, the Bible.

Overwhelmed with the high emotions that come with finding an identity and knowing that I am now a part of something that is most definitely a part of me, I returned to UMass after a summer of 'revelation' and jumped immediately into Jewish activities. The road of Jewish activism that I took was that of Zionism; the affirmation of my nationality as a Jew and the movement that re-instated Jewish political autonomy in the Jewish homeland, Eretz Yisrael.

Being brought up in "suburban Judaism" with all the furs, diamonds and big cars; with the emptiness of Jewish life and lack of Jewish values, it is no wonder that I merely dropped my Jewish identity. Who needs that nonsense?

Judaism, however, is more than what a lot of us have seen in these suburbs. It is a certain value that holds us to obtain high moral standards. It is a way of life that has survived every kind of calamity, persecution and hardship through 2,000 years of exile.

Who, therefore, are we, our generation, to throw out these values, these morals and this way of life that has outlived every civilization, every empire, every people since recorded history?!?

We are a nation-in-exile. Our language of prayer has always been Hebrew and when a Jew from one land met a Jew from another land with a foreign language, Hebrew was the mode of communication. Later, Yiddish took its place and now once again Hebrew is a living Jewish language.

A common language; a common culture; a common history; a common religion; a common people dispersed throughout the world through no choice of their own. All these are characteristics of a nation-in-exile.

I am a part of this. We are a part of this. It is our history, a history that we as a people can and must learn from.

Mobil America

By BILL RIORDAN

One of the nice things about graduating from college is that you can rightly feel you know quite a bit about the world. After four years of "higher education," one can expect to feel pretty knowledgeable — even wise. But spending four years feeding on a feast of facts and figures about the world is no guarantee that we know anything, really, about it. My concern, generally, is in regard to the process by which we form our opinions and preferences, and the possibility that we have less control over that process than we'd like to believe.

Nobody seriously believes that attempts are being made to mold our minds in any way. That's true for the most part; however, we do receive an occasional dose of propaganda in subtle, inconspicuous ways.

American business interests realize they'd be better off if fewer critics of corporate power and abuse existed. To this end, a number of corporate chieftans simply can't resist the temptation to steer public opinion their way. A corporation that's aware of its power to influence thought is an ominous entity. When it decides to use that power, it's a threat to freedom itself. This is particularly true when political ideas and preferences are at stake.

Leading the campaign to capture the mind of America is the Mobil Corporation, which took in over $28 billion in 1976. Mobil is concerned enough about what people think of it — and corporate capitalism in general — to spend $21 million a year on "public relations." This money goes into television and newspaper ads that sell not only oil — but ideology.

Each week, quarter-page advocacy ads (they call them "idea ads") appear in the most conspicuous — and expensive — spots in half a dozen of the countries leading newspapers. These ads are laden with dogma on energy and money, democracy and political economic thought.

With sheer money, Mobil has become a New York Times columnist: every Thursday a Mobil ad appears on the Op-Ed Page of the Times. Earlier this year, the subject of a Mobil ad was an attack on a Times editorial written by Charles Lindblom, professor at Yale. Lindblom's article discussed corporate power and privilege, stating that businessmen possess an inordinate degree of control over decisions "on who will find jobs and who will not, on the shape of the countryside, on the quality of the air we breathe, on the powerful productive technologies — from assembly line to nuclear energy — that both shape and risk our lives, and on how to bend our minds through sales promotion and public relations." Lindblom also said, "The fact is that the governing decisions on many of these matters are made less by government than by corporate executives."

Leading the campaign to capture the mind of America is the Mobil Corporation, which took in over 28 billion in 1976. Mobil is concerned enough about what people think of it... to spend 21 million

Mobil obviously felt obliged to pick up the sullied banner of corporate America and respond to Lindblom's accusations. And respond it did — with vehemence. Mobil devoted an entire essay to attacking Lindblom. Mobil dissected and distorted the points made by Lindblom and charged him with trying to "foist off his aesthetic values on the rest of us — that he may see ugliness where others see economic growth, housing and jobs." The tone of the Mobil article was a mixture of ridicule and disdain for the professor's views and said they represented a "peril". Specifically, it stated, "But what disturbs us most is not Professor Lindblom's distorted view of current America. Rather, it is his description of the system as 'a pervasive undemocratic disproportion in the powers and privileges of business'."

The obvious comeback to this was phrased by Lindblom himself in a subsequent letter: "Indeed, by buying space to attack me and in its freedom to say what it wishes in its ad, Mobil illustrates one of the disproportionate powers of business, as well as the way some businesses use it." And I add, what the hell does this have to do with selling oil?

Another commonly used means of cultivating ideology — and aimed specifically at colleges — is the practice of corporate gift-giving. Corporate philanthropy, which totaled $1.35 billion in 1977, is one of the few large sources of funds available to meet the financial needs of higher education. But when strings are attached, this practice acquires the power to support certain attitudes and suppress others. Again we have the Mobil Corporation.

Last August, Mobil announced its intention to discontinue grants to a Columbia University program because it lacked "confidence" in the program's new director, Chris Welles. Mr. Welles had written two books critical of the oil industry and the Wall Street Establishment. On this subject, New York University President John C. Sawhill recently wrote, "wielding philanthropic clout to promote a particular ideology on campuses endangers the ability of higher education to produce informed and reflective citizens. Democracy is based on free expression, not on suppressing viewpoints that oppose conventional political economic thought."

Our worth as educated men and women springs from our ability to criticize society and recommend directions for change. It's hard enough to formulate judgments of this sort without high-powered corporations like Mobil trying to distort the picture. This is clearly a challenge to democratic principles. As 1984 approaches, the real threat to freedom of thought comes from Big Business, not Big Brother.

UAW asks for VW union vote

DETROIT [UPI] — United Auto Workers officials petitioned the National Labor Relations Board Monday to authorize a union election at Volkswagen's first U.S. assembly plant.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said the union has the support of 80 percent of the 900 hourly workers at the New Stanton, Pa., plant southwest of Pittsburgh.

"We are confident of winning this election by an overwhelming margin," Fraser said.

Volkswagen officials declined comment on the move, but earlier indicated they would remain neutral in any attempt to unionize the recently-opened facility.

UAW Vice President Martin Gerber, director of the union's organizing department, commended the company's management for "pledging complete neutrality during the organizing drive and faithfully carrying out its pledge."

"Unlike some other companies which refuse to hire former union members from their new plants, Volkswagen of America has not discriminated against union members in his hiring policies and has hired many experienced auto workers who were members of the UAW at their previous places of employment," he said.

Current employment rolls are expected to swell to about 3,000 by the end of the year when the firm plans to reach peak production of 800 Rabbits a day.

Volkswagen officials said the typical production employee at the plant is paid $11,000 a year, which the union said is about $2 an hour less than UAW members who work at other U.S. auto companies.

James McLernon, president of Volkswagen Manufacturing Corp. of America, told reporters at the April 10 opening of the New Stanton plant that the company cannot afford to pay its workers typical UAW wages.

"This plant can't exist and couldn't continue in operation if it had to start out at parity with other UAW contracts because that's above any calculations we've made to make this plant profitable," McLernon said.

Carter aids farmers; wheat up

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter signed emergency farm legislation yesterday and announced he is raising the target price on 1978 wheat to $3.40 a bushel, an increase of 40 cents, as authorized in the bill.

Carter's action, designed to compensate growers for extra costs involved in idling cropland as a price-boosting avenue, could mean $600 million more in income supplements for wheat growers this season.

The move should have no effect on food prices.

The four-year measure will help "meet our goal of food and agricultural policies which are fair and equitable for farmers and which maintain our ability to compete effectively in world markets," Carter said.

The previous wheat target price was $3 a bushel. This is a bookkeeping figure used to compute federal payments to farmers. When average market prices for a specified period fall below the target, subsidy payments are made to bridge the gap.

Meanwhile, Acting Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said the 1978 loan rate for cotton was raised to 48 cents a pound from 44 cents as authorized in the bill.

Secretary Bob Bergland is on a trip to Europe.

"Higher target prices for wheat should encourage more wheat producers to sign up for the 1978 wheat program while the higher upland cotton loan rate will provide producers needed added support, but will not bring the minimum U.S. price for cotton to a level that would interfere with U.S. exports," she said.

But Carter called the Cotton provision "an undesirable feature of this bill."

Carter said this "may create problems in future years," although he predicted market prices will remain above 48 cents for this year's crop. Carter said he will propose legislation to eliminate the minimum.

Bacon preservative linked to cancer

WASHINGTON [AP] — The federal government yesterday proposed new regulations to sharply reduce the amount of sodium nitrite used to cure bacon because nitrite can combine with other substances to form cancer-causing agents.

Assistant Agriculture Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said that beginning June 15 meat processors will be limited to 120 parts per million of sodium nitrite in bacon, compared with 200 parts now allowed by federal regulations.

Most bacon processors already are using nitrite within the allowance of 120 parts per million, and a meat industry spokesman said this produces a safe product for consumers.

The proposal would set a maximum of 40 parts per million in the amount of nitrite, compared with the 120 million maximum which takes effect June 15.

Sodium nitrite, used for centuries as a food preservative, is recognized for its ability to eliminate deadly food poisoning bacteria in processed meat and for its capacity to make meat more appetizing.

But laboratory tests have shown that nitrites can combine with other substances, particularly when bacon is fried at high temperatures, to form nitrosamines which have caused cancer in test animals.

"We have known for several years that there are cancer-causing nitrosamines in fried bacon," Ms. Foreman said.

"We are acting to eliminate them as quickly as possible."

She said there is "no imminent health hazard," to consumers of bacon at the present time.

The USDA plans call for the use a year from now of other chemical blocking agents in combination with reduced amounts of nitrite to prevent or reduce sharply the formation of nitrosamines and still keep harmful bacteria from forming.

Couple out on bail in child's death case

SOMERVILLE [AP] — A Somerville couple was released on $25,000 bond yesterday after arraignment in Middlesex County District Court in connection with the disappearance and death of their two-year-old daughter.

Edward Gallison, 28, and his 22-year-old wife Denise, were charged with neglect of a minor child, assault and battery, illegal disposition of a dead body and failure to report a death. The two also were charged with failure to provide care and protection for a child. In addition, Denise Gallison was charged with manslaughter in the death of two-year-old Jennifer Gallison.

Judge Michael DeMarco entered innocent pleas to all charges on behalf of the two. DeMarco withheld bail at first, for the two and continued their case until May 24. However, at a subsequent bail hearing, Middlesex Superior Court Judge Paul Garrity released the couple on $25,000 bail each.

According to Somerville police, the child allegedly died from a beating and the body was placed in a plastic trash bag and dumped along with the rubbish. The body has not been found and police said they suspect it was incinerated.

Somerville police, along with welfare workers, went to the Gallison home Friday on a child abuse report. Investigators say they found Jennifer's four-year-old brother, Edward, suffering from multiple injuries.

Justices support FBI phone-tapping

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court ruled 7-2 yesterday that FBI agents have considerable leeway in deciding what conversations they may record while carrying out court-approved eavesdropping in a criminal investigation.

At issue was a section of the 1968 Crime Control Act which requires that agents be careful not to record conversations obviously having nothing to do with their inquiry.

Justice William Rehnquist wrote for the majority, in a District of Columbia case, that agents did not violate this restriction although only 40 percent of the material they recorded were related to their investigation of a narcotics operation.

Federal agents had applied for and received court permission to tap a telephone registered to Geneva Jenkins. Affidavits alleged that nine individuals probably were participating in a conspiracy to import and distribute drugs in the area, and the Jenkins telephone had been used for this purpose.

An appeal was filed in the high court by Frank Scott and Bernis Thurman, each sentenced to 10 years in prison as a result of the investigation. They argued that the agents violated the crime control act by recording all conversations, and therefore all the material should have been excluded at their trial.

U.S. District Judge Joseph Waddy, who ruled that only 40 percent of the conversations were narcotics-related, agreed with Scott and Thurman on grounds the agents made no effort to comply with the law.

Waddy was reversed by the U.S. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia, and the Rehnquist opinion agreed with that ruling.

Rehnquist said in such a wide-ranging matter, it is difficult to determine whether a telephone call is relevant until it is completed. Therefore, he wrote, compliance with the law's restriction depends "on the facts and circumstances of each case."

Court favors disclosure of sources

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday let stand an order requiring an Iowa reporter to answer questions about the sources and notes she used to write a story about a divorce case.

It also made final an order requiring a New Mexico radio station to identify the confidential sources it relied on in reporting allegations that four sheriff's deputies had been involved in improper activities.

The justices refused to review a ruling by Iowa's highest court that Diane Graham, a reporter for the Des Moines Register & Tribune, must answer questions about how she prepared her news story during pretrial proceedings on a civil lawsuit.

The Iowa case stems from a tangle of lawsuits that began more than three years ago when Sally Ann Winegard claimed she was the common law wife of John Winegard, a reported millionaire, and filed for divorce.

In a story about the divorce proceedings, reporter Graham quoted Stephen Schalk, Mrs. Winegard's lawyer, as saying the two had exchanged wedding rings during a flight from Las Vegas in 1971 and that a daughter from one of Mrs. Winegard's previous marriages had her last name changed to Winegard.

Justices rule against author

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court refused yesterday to give Norman Dacey, the author of "How to Avoid Probate," any help in his one-man battle against the Connecticut Bar Association.

The high court let stand, without comment, lower federal court dismissals of lawsuits Dacey brought against five justices of the Connecticut Supreme Court and a U.S. attorney, charging violation of his rights.

Dacey, 70, filed his own brief with the Supreme Court without the aid of a lawyer, saying none would touch his controversial case.

The suit stems from publication of Dacey's best-seller, "How to Avoid Probate."

A jury awarded him $60,000 damages in 1974 on charges he was libeled by a Connecticut Bar Association pamphlet issued in response to the book.

Things got increasingly complicated when the bar association appealed that verdict to the Supreme Court. Dacey, noting all five of the state justices were dues-paying Bar Association members who would be required to contribute to the damage award he had just won, urged them to excuse themselves from the case.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, MAY 16

Born today, you are one of those who have difficulty forming close relationships. You enjoy other people and want to work in harmony in the interest of joint accomplishment. But you cannot bring yourself to be a pal with people you don't know well. Those who know you best believe your problem is shyness; they may be right!

You may well be marked for some sort of public acclaim. You have tremendous presence when in the limelight. Your ability to speak out loudly and clearly makes you an invaluable asset to any business whose profit depends on personal contact. You may achieve great popularity – at a distance!

You have a great desire to "be somebody." Even as a child, you were thrilled at being set apart from the majority. You had little wish to be "one of the gang;" rather, you wished the gang would leave you out of things. Your self-image is one of independence and you try to act accordingly.

Others born on this date: William H. Seward; American statesman; H.E. Bates, author.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your guide.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – Lethargy may claim many hours this morning. You should relax and gather your energy slowly.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) – An early start enables you to accomplish all the day offers. Opportunity for gain increases.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Procrastination is your worst enemy today. Move quickly and efficiently.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Instead of being angry at another, harness that energy to increase your efficiency. Don't waste time.

VIRGO(AUg.23-Sept.22) – Ambition may get in the way of accomplishment today. Don't bite off more than you can chew!

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – Ignore the scorn of one who has achieved no more than you have. Go on to other things.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – Be decisive in your moves today. Indecisiveness makes it appear you don't know what you're doing.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) – Move with the course of events. You court trouble if you try to buck the winds of change.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Don't let another's forbidding manner put you off. Ask your questions and insist on answers.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Convention may hinder your progress today. You might do better to accept a new trend.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – Dreams stand in the way of the "real thing" today. Do what you have to do, not what you wish to do.

ARIES(March 20-April 19) – You are easily misled today into thinking yourself incapable of forward moves. Listen to yourself.

Ape analysis a la Smittee

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian "Stiff"

They started the season on the road against Number One ranked Cornell — having had Cortland State cancel out on UMass' season opener. It was a five hour trip to the New York school, the first such trip of three straight weekends.

Half of the squad was nowhere to be seen this time last year: Anderson, Walters, Brown, White — to name a couple, were in high school. Fifteen freshman in all — along with two transfers.

The team had a lot to live up to since UMass lacrosse has been building a reputation of success for some time now.

Did Garber's Gorillas fall short of expectations? According to the team it may have — according to the fans, definitely, according to this sports writer, no.

It was a tough task indeed to fill the shoes of those who left the teams which were highly successful. With the new players — having no previous college experience on the whole — it became an even tougher job. Though the new contingency may have some skill, there's still no substitute for experience.

The Garber's Gorillas faced the toughest schedule yet in their season. In consecutive weekends on the road, they faced Cornell, Rutgers, and Syracuse. All had two things in common — long bus rides, and losing encounters.

Though meanwhile, it was taking the campus some time to adjust to this unfamiliar aspect of men's lacrosse (losing) along with trying to put things together themselves.

While playing well against low competition (UConn, Vermont, BC), the breaks just weren't there against the tough teams. It became apparent that UMass would have their hands full beating a good team — and at the same time, they wouldn't be beaten by a lesser team.

So while on the surface it appears the Gorillas had a bad season, it isn't necessarily so (yeah I know all you UMass' fans out there are saying "Oh, he's just being nice, blah, blah, blah ..."). Oh, they didn't make the playoffs, but let's face it: no UMass team is gonna make the post season playoffs every year... and unfortunately lacrosse fans expect every team to be as good as the ones with Menna, Spooner, Patterson, etc.

The Gorillas lost to some good teams (Cornell hasn't lost a regular season game in three years), dropped UNH and Dartmouth in tough contests (and Harvard) to take the New England title, and finish nationally ranked.

If that's not enough consolation — which is true of a lot of fair whether lacrosse fans — look at it this way: next year's team should be excellent, with the experience acquired this year.

If not, at least they won't have this reporter to pick on them.

For statisticians, the Gorillas finished the season at 9-5. Had some of their tougher contests been scheduled later in the season, they might have done better, but that's besides the point (few more goals and they could've won the games too, right?).

They could've lost more than five games too, I guess.

IM aids hockey

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Intramural Department last week unofficially approved a proposal for administratively assisting the UMass Hockey Club next year.

According to Dustin Burke, Hockey Club president, the IM dept. will only be responsible for distributing announcement flyers, accepting team rosters and initial money payments, and distribution of schedules.

Team managers will be required to submit to the IM dept. team rosters, waiver and health forms, and club dues by Oct. 15th. Club dues and rosters will then be forwarded to the club.

"Due to limited ice time, teams will be scheduled on a first come, first served basis. I will arrange the scheduling; the intramural office won't be involved, only with distribution," Burke said.

Burke said, "The club applied for $1000 for support toward ice cost. Last year the club was turned down but managed to raise $9000 to cover costs."

"The intramural office's involvement should relieve some of the administrative burden on the club, however, I'll still need the services of students for other miscellaneous administrative functions," Burke said.

It should be pointed out that there are easier ways to obtain a level of pleasure than to twirl a basketball on one's finger while balanced on crutches. However, this is UMass, so what can one expect? Point of information — how many of you readers noticed that these can't possibly be his crutches since if they were, he couldn't really be wearing a set of sneakers — but would have a cast on instead? Notice how clean the hallway is also? (Staff pic by Dan Vullemier)

A pitch for Doug Welenc

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

He fulfills the necessary role in any pitching staff.

He is the man whom the coach throws the ball to and says, "Win it, 'cause we need this one."

He is the man who allays the fear of sudden long losing streaks.

He is the stopper. In UMass' case, he is Doug Welenc.

The statistics speak for themselves: 8-3, 1.55 earned run average, nine complete games in 11 starts, 23 walks and 55 hits in 81 innings. And yet, his value to the team goes much deeper.

Four times this season, Welenc has started the next game after a Minuteman loss and won the outing. Perhaps not coincidentally, he pitched a complete game, 5-2 win over Boston College on April 18 which began a season-ending surge that saw UMass win 12 out of its last 17 games. The late flurry earned the Minutemen a final 20-19 record (18-11 Northern) and also convinced the selection committee that UMass was worthy of competing in the ECAC District I playoffs.

And, as befits a pitcher of his talents, coach Dick Bergquist named Welenc to start Friday's opening playoff game against Providence College (1 p.m. start at Holy Cross' Fitton Field).

In this, his sophomore year, Welenc is exhibiting the talent everyone from Bergquist to the Houston Astros saw in him two years ago.

Welenc decided to attend UMass after a brilliant three-sport career at Greenfield High School. An all-Western Mass. pitcher, Welenc was the primary force behind Greenfield's baseball success in 1976. That year, Welenc led the Green Wave to a berth in the state tournament before his team was beaten in the finals by Grafton High School. Jim Lewis, now a Minuteman teammate, was Grafton's star hurler.

Upon graduation, Welenc was chosen in the 22nd round of the June free agent draft by the Astros. But he passed up the offer to become a pro in favor of studying for an accounting degree.

Welenc was also accepted at Amherst College, but chose UMass due to its superior baseball program and presence of a business curriculum.

The 6-2, 185-pound righthander suffered through a 2-2, 3.77 ERA year in 1977, due in large measure to back problems.

"Early in April, I pulled some back muscles in running and fielding drills," he said. "It bothered me a little during the season."

But playing for a team in Canada over the summer, weightlifting and special exercises, helped him work out the injury. Welenc said the back has given him no cause for concern this season.

"I think Doug's biggest improvement has come in his physical condition," Bergquist said. "He's already a very versatile athlete."

Welenc has played sparingly at first base, and is hitting only .171. He hit three doubles in a start in Florida, but said quickly "it's all been downhill from there.

"We have an understanding," Welenc said of his relationship with Bergquist, "That if playing first affects my pitching, I'll drop it."

Concerning his numero uno assignment — pitching — Bergquist said Welenc has come a long way since high school.

"Doug has become a pitcher," he said. "He's developed a slider and changeup, and when his fastball isn't right he can rely on those pitches to get batters out. I take no credit for his development."

"I'm more of a pitcher," Welenc agreed. "In high school I'd face may be two or three good batters and I could blow the ball by 'em. Here, I have to be more of a pitcher."

If Welenc wins Friday's start, he will tie Mike Flanagan's for second spot on the list of most wins in a season. The current Baltimore Orioles starter won nine games in a 31-game season in 1973. Carl Boteze holds the record with 10 victories in a 28-game, 1967 campaign.

Bergquist considers Welenc to be his best pitching prospect since Flanagan. The coach said Flanagan was more of a flamethrower, but that Welenc has a better assortment of pitches and superior location.

Bergquist has also reiterated that he considers Welenc to be the best college pitcher in New England.

And few would beg to differ.

Doug Welenc follows through while pitching UMass to a 5-2 win over Boston College last month. Welenc has been the stopper for the Minutemen, who head to Holy Cross Friday for the ECAC playoffs. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Softball wins Easterns; goes on to Nationals

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's softball team wrote its own ticket to the College World Series by winning two games against Westchester State (Pa.) yesterday in the finals of the Eastern Regionals at Allentown, Pa.

UMass unleashed 16 hits and capitalized on nine Westchester errors in the first game to run up a 13-0 victory. In the second game Westchester settled down and UMass became a little unnerved, but the Minutewomen squeaked by 3-2.

Sophomore pitcher Sue Peters (10-0) backboned the opening win with eight strikeouts. Peters, the strongest theme in the UMass success story this season, relieved Kathy O'Connell in the second game to get the final out.

Because Peters had done so much to put UMass in contention for the national title, it was only fitting that she was on the mound the moment UMass declared itself the best team in the East.

The Minutewomen won four games — Peters pitched three of them — in the early rounds of the Easterns at Stratford, Ct. last week to earn their place in the finals.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson said yesterday's doubleheader followed a "season-long tendency of being up for one game, but not for the next."

Thompson said thoughts of the World Series in Omaha, Neb. next week hampered the Minutewomen's concentration in the second game.

Had Westchester won the second game, which was almost the case, the two teams would have played an unprecedented third game yesterday evening.

After a show of power in the opener, the Minutewomen could only muster four hits in the second game. UMass committed one error — something the Minutewomen Westchester surged late in the game and nearly forced a tripleheader. With two out in the top of the sixth, Westchester loaded the bases against O'Connell. Then a Westchester bloop single dropped infront of Peters in left field to score a run. Peters threw the ball to Chris Verdini at third but was too late to nip the advancing runner. Verdini pivoted quickly and sent the ball home to force out the tying run and end the inning.

In the Westchester seventh, O'Connell gave up two walks, putting runners on first and second with one out. Then first baseman Jen Parker made a diving catch on a bunt pop up, threw the ball to first for the double play, and suddenly UMass was the number one team in the East.

Thompson said defense was the key in both games, but it was hardly necessary in the opener.

With Peters giving her typical performance on the mound, the UMass batters knocked in five runs in each of the first two innings. Meanwhile, Westchester ran around the field committing error after error. Then, after two scoreless innings, the Minutewomen added single runs in each of the final three innings.

Kathy Horrigan went three-for-five, knocking in four runs. Peters helped her own cause with three hits and three runs batted in. Rhonda McManus (two hits) also had three RBIs.

So it's off to Omaha — The College World Series. And it's going to be an uphill battle all the way. UMass is seeded last out of 16 teams, but Thompson is anxious to get there.

"The team held together well under pressure in the Easterns," she said. "They were composed and very confident. We'll show 'em the East is a lot better than they think."

Leo Kalinowski tries to score against Siena College during action in Sunday's doubleheader. The Minutemen's third baseman is running into an easy out, though. UMass split the twinbill, winning the opener, 6-1, but losing the nightcap, 7-1. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Royals dump Sox, 3-1

KANSAS CITY [UPI] — Rich Gale limited the powerful Boston Red Sox to two singles last night and fellow rookie Clint Hurdle poked a two-run fourth-inning double to give the Kansas City Royals a 3-1 victory.

Gale, making just his third major-league start, allowed a single to Rick Burleson in the third and another to Jerry Remy in the eighth in upping his record to 3-0.

He set down 13 straight batters at one point and ended hitting streaks of 11 games by Carl Yastrzemski, six games by Fred Lynn and four games by Carlton Fisk. Gale walked five and struck out five.

Gale, called up from Omaha by the Royals on April 28, did not allow the American League's hottest hitter — Jim Rice — to get the ball out of the infield as he struck him out twice in four appearances. A bases-loaded double play ball by Rice scored the only Boston run in the third.

Hal McRae poked a one-out single and Al Cowens was hit by a pitch from loser Alan Ripley prior to Hurdle's opposite field double. Kansas City added one more run in the seventh when Frank White doubled, moved to third on a sacrifice bunt by Willie Wilson and scored when shortstop Rick Burleson mishandled Fisk's throw to second base on Wilson's steal.

Boston's Butch Hobson runs down Kansas City's Clint Hurdle between third base and home in the fourth inning. Hobson eventually got the tag, but it didn't help the Sox' cause very much as they fell 3-1. (UPI photo)

Good-bye, good-bye...

... Part two — good-bye column: hey, if you've been here since they changed the name of the school from Mass Aggie, you'd have a lot to write for your last column also ...

To the women's lacrosse team and coach Frank Garahan — good luck in the nationals — and have a super summer ...

To the baseball team — you make the playoffs but no one watches you on campus — or seems to care. Do you feel like the Oakland Athletics? Is it because people tend to believe that the personnel on the team think they're amazing baseball players — when in actuality, the chances of them making the pros are exceedingly slim. This isn't USC (Bill Lee's alma mata) or U. Arizona, but UMass. Take into account that UMass has very slim potential for ever being a national power in baseball.

While we're at it, maybe we should figure out why the athletic department is pumping money into football also. Football will never, and I mean never, reach national prominence — but the a.d. pours money into it, while ignoring lacrosse, hockey, and gymnastics.

Supposedly someone has or is checking into converting the Alumni Stadium into a domed arena — possibly housing both hockey and-or basketball. Don't hold your breath though.

Excitement at UMass-Amherst: Most exciting encounters to watch at UMass in the last couple of years: Al Skinner (when he got mad, his face lit up); Alex Eldridge (anytime); Peil Pennington and Steve Shubert combination; a UMass SLAM DUNK; the 'Chief' at a lacrosse game; Villanova-UMass hoop game; the Minutemen at Madison Square Garden in an NIT victory in 1972 (most of you readers were still in high school); and streaking. And intramurals.

Non-related sports items: St. Patrick's Day at Theta Chi; Schlitz-a-rama and Busch-fest; 'Cement-City's' celebration last week; Poor Richards and the Bluewall; bike riding in Leverette; and exploring the Fine Arts Center in quest of the 'Green Auditorium'.

Wondering if long trips on buses affect a team's performance — even if the trip was the day before the game: tell you one thing, hotel stays while traveling with the lacrosse team were decent — HoJo's rated number one, Sheraton last; Rutgers has an excellent sporting complex — Syracuse not bad — Dartmouth's holds less than the Cage but looks good — UConn's is the pits ...

Fireball III: this is the third straight year for such a game; the first time it has been run by someone in the Sylvan area; by the way, funding for the event was mostly handled by one person financially and not an organization — (including the game keg) — organizer Steve Zinkowski, who absorbed the bulk of the costs of the event.

I've figured out a way to tell if what you've been doing in your spare time in the way of athletic activity is a sport or not: if the sport you're participating in is decided by a low score to figure a winner, then it's not a sport — that means go if, cross country, and hearts (card game). In a real sport the high score should always determine the winner (remember this is an opinion — but this is a column too).

Some beer contests are and aren't sports: To see how many beers you can drink in an hour, the winner is decided by a high number — thus it is a sport — whereas with guzzling beer, the winner is determined by the shortest consumption time (thus guzzling is not a sport) ...

Summer lends itself to key softball games ... and excellent times ... be it Amherst League, Belchertown, or Cape Cod ...

Umies, UMass-Amherst, and five years after ... parties are different now — quieter ... will miss Sylvan softball tourney, basketball in the Cage, Boyden, Amherst Gym ... slam dunk contest in the school of Ed ... hall soccer ... whiffle ball on Sylvan hoop court ... tennis on Amherst College courts (excluding clay ones) ... sleeping on the roof of Nope gym ... smoking (?) in Fine Arts Center theatre at 2 a.m. ... good-bye II: Cetto-Inc., Pete and Rob, and buddy Steve, ... and Mikes — (doesn't everyone know a lot of Mikes?) from Cape (two of 'em) ... Judy Kennedy and Co., Stephanie ... Wendy ... Garde ... Lennie ... Brady ... Brooksie ... Ab, Dave, Eddie, Ziggy .. Sean .. Mark, Howie, George (PHS) .. and those who for room purposes can't be included, unfortunately ... catch the classifieds Wed.. UMass — I'll miss you ...

'A tough cookie'

Cornell guages Knapp

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

He's "tough," "quiet," "non-charismatic," and "a real bastard."

These were the words used by various members of the Cornell University community last night to describe their provost and newly elected UMass president, David C. Knapp.

Knapp, 50, was elected UMass' 18th president Monday by the Board of Trustees, edging out Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. He was one of five finalists being considered for the position.

"Knapp takes his time making decisions," said Joel Silbey, chairman of the Library Board at Cornell and one of three persons interviewed by telephone.

"He insists on hearing all sides first and then he always leaves an opening," Silbey said. "You must be able to convince him of the justice of your opinions. I've never gone away frustrated."

Students who work at the Cornell Sun, the student newspaper, disagree. "Knapp is a tough cookie, he's very hard to deal with; you'll find that out," said an editor who asked to remain anonymous.

In a telephone interview last night Knapp tersely described his views of the UMass presidency. UMass needs a good, aggressive president who is interested in education," he said. "I'm not a politican."

"He's very set in his ways and he doesn't like to talk to students all that much," the editor continued. "Knapp has hung up on me a few times when I've asked him questions he didn't want to answer." However, he conceded that Knapp was "smart. He always knows what he doing."

History professor, L. Pearce Williams agreed that Knapp tended to be "remote" with students. "He's not exactly the student's friend," Williams said, "but he is practical, he listens and he will always do what he feels is best for the university."

"Knapp was provost at Cornell during a very difficult time when the well ran dry and he was forced to allocate some funds when none were available," said Williams. "I think he did a good job."

This occurred several years ago, our source said, when the Cornell dean of the College of Arts and Sciences overspent his budget allocation by $800,000.

Cornell, an Ivy-League university in Ithaca, New York, is half publicly funded and half privately funded.

There was a consensus that Knapp enjoys power and was hunting for an appropriate university presidency.

"Some people said he was running the university out of the provost's office," disclosed the Sun editor, "but since Frank Rhodes, the new president moved in, he's pretty much been out of the picture."

Williams confirmed this. "That is definitely true," he said. "When Dale Korson was president, Knapp was running the academic side of things. He and Korson had similar low-key personalities and they worked well together. Rhodes has a very different style, however, and redefined the provost's role. This sent Knapp searching elsewhere."

All agreed that Knapp has alot of enemies. "But, he's touch," said the student editor, "it doesn't bother him."

Nor does the financial straitjacket that binds UMass.

Knapp said he does not see the size of the UMass budget as a serious constraint on the presidency. "All universities need money," he said.

Students plan legal suit to get evaluation forms

By W. ANDREW SUNDSTROM
Collegian Staff

Two members of the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate plan to file suit in Hampshire Superior Court next week to obtain access to all course and teacher evaluation guides on file here.

The students, Steven Kropp and Joseph F. Connolly, say they will cite a state statute requireing access to public records in their suit against Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, the academic deans and all department chairpeople. The action was authorized by a student senate vote last spring.

Michele L. Leaf, the Student Legal Services Office attorney who will be representing the students, last night saif most University departments had failed to release evaluations within 10 days after demand letters were issued, making them liable to legal compulsion by the statute.

Acting Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Jeremiah M. Allen said the case involves two conflicting laws, the public access statute and the fair information practices law, which states that "personal data systems" cannot be made public. The defendants, he said, are contending that because teacher evaluations are used in making personnel decisions they are subject to the fair information law and need not be released.

Chancellor Bromery was unavailable for comment.

Steve Baumohl, a legal services attorney working on the case, said the issue involved is "whether students can have access to the information they themselves provide in the evaluations."

Allen, however, said that until a legal decision is handed down, administrators who relase evaluations without the consent of the individual faculty members will be liable to damages suits for any information that is considered publicly damaging.

Kropp said the suit was part of an ongoing process to obtain a basic service the administration should be providing with both information and funding. Course and teacher evaluation guides are presently prepared by a student senate committee, which uses evaluations voluntarily released by individual faculty members and some of the departments.

Ultimately, "students could attempt to compel departments to take action against professors who received poor evaluations. Course and teacher evaluations are a basic service the administration should provide," Kropp said.

No change in MSP talks

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Contract negotiations resumed yesterday between the faculty union and the administration for the first time since the talks were broken off April 24.

Union and administration negotiators met for three hours in a meeting in the Campus Center.

"In spite of our high hopes with the administration saying they wanted to come back to the table, positions are relatively unchanged," said Larry S. Roberts, a Massachusetts Society of Professors negotiator. "From what happened this morning, I'm not encouraged."

No administration official could be reached for comment yesterday.

The talks broke off after administration bargainers left the talks when faculty representatives would not accept a proposal on personnel policy.

In the wake of that breakdown, the MSP began considering to withhold grades from the administration, began a daily picketing of the Whitmore administration building, and voted to picket commencement ceremonies May 27.

The MSP is the Amherst unit of the faculty union. Together with the Faculty Staff Association at UMass-Boston, the union represents some 2000 faculty members.

Contract negotiations began last summer after the union was formed in February 1977.

SGA asks veto power

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association is currently suggesting that it be given input and veto power on a wide range of matters dealing with the faculty union's first contract with the administration.

In a 13-point proposal to the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the students asked no contract between the faculty and the administration be signed prior to approval by an undergraduate student referendum, that the MSP take no job action which may affect students before consulting with student representatives, and that students be given full parity with faculty and administration in contract negotiations.

Students presently sit in on the talks, but cannot speak without being recognized, and cannot put forth proposals.

The proposal has met with mixed faculty reaction.

"The general status is that we are discussing these things," said John H. Bracey, MSP vice-president for internal affairs. "More substantial items need more discussion."

No representative from the SGA collective bargaining task force could be reached yesterday.

Concerning student contract ratification, Bracey said the MSP "didn't think it could agree to that," for leagal reasons.

"Our general feeling was that students have the right to have student input. They're welcome to poll at any time."

Bracey said the main concern with contract ratification by students was one of time, but that if "20,000 students are opposed to something, that's something we'd have to think about."

The MSP is in general agreement on a number of other items in the proposal, Bracey said, including:

— that the MSP not sign any contract which will include a salary increase to be funded by a tuition increase.

— that the MSP affirm the right of students to collectively bargain aspects of their education.

Bracey said the consulting with students before the MSP takes any job action is what is normally done.

"Consultation means consultation. No one has veto power over the other," he said. "That's always been the policy of the MSP. But obviously, we can't give up the right to do something. It would hurt our autonomy."

Prof wants MSP out

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A UMass forestry professor is taking action to decertify the Massachusetts Society of Professors as the faculty's official collective bargaining unit.

Joseph S. Larson says he has gathered about 285 signatures, roughly one-half of the required 30 percent of total membership required to institute a recall election.

Larson has been the president of the American Association of University Professors, a group which rivaled the MSP in the February 1977 election for a faculty collective bargaining representative.

"The reason for this is based on the miserable record of the union in the past year," Larson said.

He said the faculty union has failed to obtain a two-and-one-half percent pay raise for its members, has been ineffectual in obtaining a contract, and has not been able to attract members. The state legislature last year granted the pay hike to all state employees, but the administration has said the raise must be negotiated as part of a final contract, since the group has unionized.

"They want to impose a minority contract on the rest of the faculty," Larson said, whereby most of the faculty will not be able to vote on the new contract. He said the lack of membership is in effect a "faculty condemnation of the union."

Massachusetts Society of Professors President James E. Cathey offered a different explanation.

"If there is a provision for an agency fee in the contract, then everyone gets to vote," he said. "If not, it is the choice of the union whether everyone votes, or just the union."

Agency fees are fees paid to the union by faculty members who are represented by the union, but are not dues-paying members.

"We haven't come to that yet," Cathey said. "I assume we'll ask for an agency fee. We're not out to impose a minority contract."

As far as lack of membership, Cathey said, "typically what happens is that 80 or 90 percent of the unit joins the union after the contract is signed."

GSEU files suit; supports no grades

The Graduate Student Employees Union has filed aun unfair labor practice suit with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission against the UMass administration.

It has also come out in support of the Massachusetts Society of Professors withholding grades.

The unfair labor charge involves hiring non-graduate students to fill positions in special programs, according to union members. Those employees do not have union representation, union members say, and miss out on benefits such as health care and tuition waivers.

The union is presently seeking recognition by the labor commission as the employees' collective bargaining unit.

Meanwhile, the union expressed support for the MSP.

"The Graduate Student Employees Union supports the withholding of grades by the MSP," a release from the union says. "We urge all graduate students to stand in solidarity and cooperation with their faculty in supporting this action."

The MSP has not yet reached a final decision on withholding grades, although it has authorized its executive board to proceed "as it sees fit."

Parents seek info on son's bike death

The parents of an Amherst youth killed in a recent bike-a-thon are appealing to area residents who might have information concerning the death.

Seth Berins, of 272 Lincoln Ave., was fatally struck by an auto April 30 while riding his bicycle on Rocky Hill Road at about 11 a.m., his parents said yesterday.

Michael and Tina Berins said they are asking that anyone with knowledge of the incident contact them, in an effort to learn who the driver of the auto was. They can be reached at 549-5395.

The bike-a-thon was sponsored by the Arnold Air Society of the UMass Air Force ROTC program. A society spokeswoman yesterday said the boy was riding out of place in the event.

Greeks discuss co-op funding

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

The president of the student run cooperative providing the UMass Greek houses with food and supplies, currently rumored to be in financial difficulties, met with representatives of member houses last night in a private session at a fraternity, but refused to discuss the meeting with the Collegian.

Fraternity Management Association President Robert Mullens, of Delta Chi fraternity, last night moved his meeting with house members from campus property at Berkshire House to private property at Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity on North Pleasant Street to prevent the Collegian from attending the meeting. Representatives said the meeting was not the business of the Collegian.

Mullens had called the meeting to discuss the financial conditions of the co-op, said by University administrators to be at least $5,000 in debt because it cannot cover checks issued to businesses.

The co-op has been operating since the early sixties, but never encountered financial difficulties until last fall when its professional business manager could not work because of a back ailment, according to observers. The manager, Joseph Sexton of Turners Falls, has said he quit his position this April because the back ailment prevented him from working.

The co-op serves as a distributor of food, fuel and paper products to member fraternities and sororities and oversees the financial billing for the supplies. The co-op has also taken out loans from area banks to pay for the costs.

Sexton this week said the co-op always paid its loans and bills while he was working as its manager, before he encountered the back ailments last fall.

University officials in the student affairs office said thev first learned of possible financial difficulties at the co-op last fall when businesses complained to them that the co-op was not paying its bills.

Dean of Students William F. Field said he has seen bounced checks from the account of the co-op totaling at least $5,000.

Mullens claims he hasn't seen any checks, and will only say the finances of the co-op are "stable". He refuses to elaborate.

One person hired to maintain the financial records since Sexton left, Richard Pyrzbylek, could not be reached last night for comment.

Another person who works in the co-op office, Joel Schapero, whose address is the Delta Chi fraternity where Mullens lives, last night would not say what his job there entails. Mullens said Schapero only answers the telephone and has no knowledge of the finances. Mullens also declined to give out Pyrzbylek's name, saying he does not want to drag him into the issue.

Anti-abortion 'tag' hinders bill

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

The $693 million bill to fund the state's Medicaid program, now being debated by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, would probably be passed without the anti-abortion amendment currently attached to it if the governor vetoes the bill in its present form, according to one state legislator.

"If the governor line vetoes the amendment and sends it back," said Rep. Emmanuel Cerra (D-E.Boston) "it could be the case that the bill would pass without the rider."

The bill has currently passed the house, and has been sent to the senate's Ways and Means Committee before consideration from the full senate. The bill will then be sent to the governor, who has indicated in the past he will veto the bill if the anti-abortion amendment is attached to it.

> "If the governor line vetoes the amendment and sends it back, it could be the case that the bill would pass without the rider."
> — Rep. Emmanuel Cerra (D-E.Boston)

The amendment says that state funds cannot be used for abortions.

Cerra, who says he has consistently voted for anti-abortion legislation, said he did not intend to change his own vote if the bill with the amendment is returned to the house.

If the Medicaid appropriations bill passes the senate in its present form and is signed by the governor it would ban the use of state funds for abortions, according to Jean Weinberg, head of the Massachusetts affiliate of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

Earlier, however, Weinberg predicted that the bill might go through without the rider because of the political situation.

"It's an election year," she said, "and the speaker of the house told the representatives that they would be home in their districts by July 4 to campaign."

But if the bill goes through and Dukakis vetoes it because of the anti-abortion amendment, she said, then they will have to start all over again because they can't adjourn until the budget passes.

The present Medicaid budget will expire on June 1.

"Eventually, they will get the message that the amendment is not going to get through, and then maybe they'll quit tacking them on so they can get out of (the State House)" she said.

Weinberg said that it is especially important this election year for the representatives to get home and campaign because 80 house seats are being cut due to redistricting.

"They are all worried about losing their seats," she said, because many of them will now be running against each other, and in unfamiliar districts.

Furthermore, she said, the longer the representatives are in the state house the better opportunity for candidates back in the districts to campaign against them.

Rep. Elaine Noble, D-Cambridge, said that such a strategy had a "high risk" factor, but that she believed it was "very likely" it would happen just that way.

The anti-abortion issue, she said, is an issue that only hurts everybody.

No one wants an issue like this on their shoulders in an election year, Noble said, "and they (the anti-abortionists) can probably take the heat" for letting it go.

Sen. John W. Olver, (D-Amherst), who has always voted against anti-abortion legislation in the senate, said that while such a victory is "very possible," it would be contingent on the senate upholding Dukakis' veto, should it vome.

The danger, he said, may come if some of the pro-choice senators feel they can no longer "in good conscience" sustain a veto of an important bill because of an anti-abortion amendment attached to it.

However, Rep. Roland Orlandi (D-Boston), said he does not believe that elections and redistricting would reverse the overall outcome any future house vote on the amendment but thinks, instead, that the voting in both the house and senate could grow in favor of the rider.

Most of those who have voted against the abortion would probably vote that way again, Orlandi said, adding that, "at least" those who have largely "white" constituancies would.

"It (the Medicaid budget) is Dukakis' problem.... he wants it," Orlandi said.

Reps. Jimmy Collins (D-Charlestown) and Kenneth M. Lemanski (D-Chicopee), both of whom have voted for anti-abortion legislation in the past, said they, also, do not believe the political situation would affect how the house would vote in the future.

Lemanski said, however, that if he thought the Medicaid appropriations bill was in danger of not getting through because of the riders he would vote against them.

The anti-abortion amendment to the Medicaid portion of the state budget was added in the House Ways and Means Committee in late April, according to Rep. Charles Doyle (D-W.Rox).

"Ways and Means added it on after we (Doyle and Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston) announced that we would add it when the bill came to the house floor, anyway," Doyle said.

Doyle and Flynn have been two of the most active opponants of state funded abortion in the House. The anti-abortion rider to the Medicaid budget, along with others attached to the state employees health insurance appropriations budget, are only the most recent of their attempts to halt state funding of abortion.

Kelly:'yes' on abortion

BOSTON [AP] — An abortion funding ban that jeopardizes state medical insurance coverage is a "grave moral wrong," says the state budget kingpin, who plans to neutralize its impact for the second year in a row.

"It seems we are holding some people hostage in order to get their acceptance of our philosophical belief," said Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, in reference to the Legislature's inclusion of the funding ban.

His comments came Tuesday after a state employees representative predicted "financial ruin" for state employees with seriously ill family members if the abortion rider remains tacked onto the $61 million insurance appropriation. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has threatened to veto any sections including abortion bans.

During a budget hearing, Kelly, D-Oxford, said he supports separating the abortion funding ban from five appropriation items it is attached to in the budget. He proposed including it as a separate item — as he did last year — to avoid a funding blockade.

"I have no objection to them trying to get it through," said Kelly of the anti-abortion forces, but he indicated that he would vote against the measure.

House bill 5199, an act banning the use of state funds for abortions, passed its first hurdle in the joint Judiciary Committee and is now before the House Ways and Means Committee. Both the bill and abortion rider in the budget are the work of Boston Reps. Charles R. Doyle and Raymond L. Flynn.

Kelly also said he believes holding medical insurance coverage hostage to get a ban on abortion funding might violate the constitutional right of state employees.

"If it went to the courts, there's no way the Commonwealth could refuse to pay it, is there?" Kelly asked Administration and Finance Secretary John R. Buckley during the hearing.

"I'm sure they would rule that the contract was negotiated in good faith ... the employees have a right to the benefits," responded Buckley.

The abortion rider issue was brought to the fore by Mark J. Dalton, who represents the National Association of Government Employees.

He noted that state employees will be without insurance coverage as of July 1 if the rider remains on the insurance appropriation, and Dukakis votes the item as he has promised to do.

"Whoever has claims will be wiped out," said the NAGE spokesman.

Room-to-Move fears getting bumped

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

Room-To-Move, a peer counseling and education center on campus, is in danger of being terminated, according to one of the program's staff members.

Assistant Outreach Coordinator Charles T. Bruha said the program, which is funded partially by the Undergraduate Student Senate and partially by University Health Services, has been under scrutiny from Mental Health Division Assistant Director David P. Kraft. Kraft is also the advocate for Room-To-Move, and supervises, its director, Allen E. Gordon.

Kraft questioned the adequacy of services being provided by Room-To-Move in a March 1 memo to Mental Health Director Leighton C. Whitaker, He said in the memo that many program goals were unclear, and later proposed the termination of the present Room-To-Move program.

Gordon responded this week in a memo to University Health Services Executive Director Barry W. Averill, saying Kraft suggested "no concrete way of indicating accomplishment or progress" in the program. Gordon also questioned in the memo Kraft's definition of adequacy.

Room-To-Move, according to Bruha, is a branch of the Mental Health Division of the University Health Services, and is mandated to serve three groups on campus: those with drug and alcohol problems, people who would not go to traditional mental health facilities, and Third World community members.

If the program were terminated, Bruha said, Averill has given assurnaces that the money allocated for Room-To-Move would "at the very least go to serve those the program is mandated to serve."

Room-To-Move last semester serviced about 200 students in counseling, according to Kraft.

Kraft last night said his memo was "prompted by the internal staff review of all health service commitments. In trying to assess all the commitments, we were answering the question, 'are we doing the best we can in terms of service delivery,' in this case to students. I had to unfortunately say that at the present time Room-To-Move was not meeting students' needs adequately."

Unity day in Philly

By CHARLES BAGLI
Revolutionary Student Brigade

On May 20 Philadelphia, the city of "Brotherly Love" will be host to one of the numerous African Liberation Days. African Liberation Day was established by the Organization of African Unity in 1971 at the end of May, as a day of solidarity with the liberation struggles in Africa.

This year support for the freedom fighters in southern Africa and opposition to U.S. ties with apartheid, has mushroomed. From coast to coast the nation's colleges have been the site of demonstrations and rallies demanding divestment of corporate stocks in South Africa. African Liberation Day is traditionally a day to pull together, internationally, all the people in support of African liberation in a broad demonstration of that support.

The movement in this country (and internationally) has accomplished a number of things. South Africa is growing politically isolated through U.N. sanctions, arms embargos and political action. In addition UMass Amherst has divested $700,000 worth of stock; UWisconsin $8 million and a number of other schools have partially divested. South Africa has also been banned from the Davis Cup competition.

The rebellions in Azania (South Africa) have propelled thousands in this country to come to the support of the liberation fighters. African Liberation Day is a day to put it together in a united way.

A Coalition of community, worker, student and revolutionary organizations has called for an African Liberation Day in Philly May 20. The Coalition has obtained march and rally permits.

The demonstration will be taking place in the city where the fight between discrimination and justice, oppression and liberation are sharpest in the U.S. right now. Barricades are still up and 1000 police still terrorize the West Philadelphia community in Mayor Rizzo's rash attempt to crush MOVE, a radical Black commune, and use them as an example to the black community (and others) of what happens to those that stand up to oppression.

Years ago Malcolm X said, "You can't understand what's going on in Mississippi if you don't understand what's going on in the Congo. You can't understand what's going on in the Congo if you don't understand what's going on in Mississippi." Today we can you can't understand what's going in Philly, New York or Boston, if you don't understand what's going on in southern Africa — it's the same enemy, the same struggle!

African Liberation Day is the day to let the whole world know we stand with the fires and furies of the liberation struggles in southern Africa; a beacon light to people world-wide who long for liberation. African Liberation Day is the day to indict the corporate rulers of this country who for centuries have reaped untold billions from the slave trade, apartheid slavery in South Africa and centuries of brutal super-exploitation of blacks in this country. African Liberation Day is the day to declare our righteous hatred for national oppression whether it's Soweto or Philly; to declare the determination of 20 million people to be free.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade is working with the Coalition in Philly and is organizing transportation from UMass for all interested students. Transportation will cost about $10. Saturday evening there will be an evening of revolutionary culture featuring Gil Scott-Heron. There will also be a conference sponsored by the Revolutionary Student Brigade Sunday at Temple. Transportation will be returning to Amherst both Saturday night and Sunday night. For more information please call 256-0501.

The never ending saga

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] — As Patricia Hearst settled in to prison routine Tuesday, her attorney said he plans one last-ditch effort to obtain the convicted bank robber's freedom.

George Martinez refused to discuss details of the legal strategy or to give a timetable. But he said he would ask U.S. District Court Judge William Orrick Jr. to modify the seven-year prison sentence.

After her March 20, 1976, conviction of joining her terrorist kidnappers in a 1974 San Francisco bank robbery, Miss Hearst was assigned to the Pleasanton facility but was transferred to a San Diego prison after her attorneys complained of threats against her.

Her lawyers repeatedly have expressed concern for her safety because she has cooperated with authorities since her September 1975 arrest.

Miss Hearst was kidnapped at gunpoint Feb. 4, 1974, by a small band of revolutionaries who called themselves the Symbionese Liberation Army and spent 19 months in the terrorist underground.

Collegian Fails test

As an avid reader of Black Affairs, I have followed the periodic outbursts of sentiments exclaiming, "Why is there a separate section called Black Affairs?"

Interesting to note is that these comments are echoed not by black students attending UMass but their white counterparts.

With the Collegian offices being occupied by women advocating for women's pages these last few days, the Collegian (quite unknowing) was put to the supreme test ... which it failed with flying colors.

During the Collegian take-over, Black Affairs ceased its publications. (The beginning of the test). Would the Collegian demonstrate that there was not a need for a separate section, would it prove that adequate coverage could be given to the black community minus a mechanism such as Black Affairs?

The answer? None of the above.

Only once during the absence of Black Affairs did I see any news relating to the black community in the Collegian. What I did see was a picture of a black student playing a guitar (or something similar). Could it have been possible that nothing newsworthy was happening? Be realistic. Did anyone from the Collegian even attempt to find out, or is it assumed that it is the function of Black Affairs.

Thank you Collegian for proving so beautifully the need for alternative publications such as Black Affairs and Nummo News.

Name withheld by request

Where third world news has gone

As a result of the recent women's occupation of the Collegian offices, I sorely missed the issues of Black Affairs. It seemed there wasn't very much happening in the third world community during this period. As the Collegian attempted to show that it could present Women's news from a more respectable perspective, news from the Third World Community suffered immensely.

Why? For the same reason that it suffered before there ever was a Black Affairs and that same reason justifies the existence of Black Affairs today. The Collegian on the whole is not a conscious enough newspaper to report events that occur in the third world community from a third world perspective. They have consistently ignored the needs of Third World people on this campus and in the community in general.

Most of the news concerning the third world appeared in the form of newswires which are not written from a third world perspective and there were letters - to - the - editor, which has little to do with the Collegian's presentation of news.

Is there a need for Black Affairs, no one with any sense could not say no. Is there a need for Women's pages, again the answer without question would have to be yes.

The Collegian is probably worried about who is going to take over their offices next. Instead of being worried they should be more concerned with how to become a diversified and thriving publication that serves the needs of the people in this community who in the past have only had token representation in this media source.

Genocide in the form of sterilization abuse is being practiced today.

In 1891 the concept of genocide was conceived by Sir Francis Galton. He thought that people were rich because their blood contained elements that determined wealth and that poor people had inferior blood polluted with biologic determinants, which he called pauperism. This misconception was perpetuated by a disciple of Galton, named Karl Pearson. He believed in and advocated the sterilization of persons with "little civic worth" and called this practical politics. This organic explanation of social problems is both preponderous and ignorant compared to modern thinking, but was quite in line with nineteenth century thinking.

In 1911 a report from the Committee to Study and Report in the Best Practical Means of Cutting Off the Defective Germ Plasm in the American Population, otherwise known as the Sterilization Committee, stated that "much social inadequacies of a deep-seated biological nature, and can be remedied only by cutting off the human strains that produce it." They named ten major classes of "race polluters". They are listed her by degree of "menace":

1. The Feeble-Minded Class
2. The Pauper Class
3. The Inebriate Class
4. The Criminalistic Class
5. The Epileptic Class
6. The Insane Class
7. The Asthenic Class
8. The Diathetic Class
9. The Deformed Class
10. The Cacaesthetic Class

The "experts" argued that unless these persons were sterilized, prisons, asylums, and schools would be overcrowded with these social "misfits" and public welfare cost would destroy the economy.

By 1930 compulsory sterilization laws had become very practical politics in the United States. Thirty of the 48 states had enacted eugenic sterilization laws.

Hitler, in 1933, adopted a law or act calling for forced sterilization, modeled after the U.S.'s Model Sterilization law of 1920. As a result, four million people were sterilized during Hitler's reign of power.

Ten years later the United States was able to match this count. In a popular 1947 book, entitled Human Breeding and Survival, sterilizations based on social criteria such as criminality, low income, poor health, lack of education were advocated. This book and The Road to Survival, which followed in 1948, had an impact on many Americans. One was Hugh Moore, owner of Dixie Cups, and he dedicated his life and much of his wealth to the support of the sterilization movement.

Through ethnocentric men such as these, the eugenic sterilization movement was conceived and integrated into the political and medical systems in the United States. It was readily accepted and grew rapidly because of the pre-existing prejudice and discrimination against minorities, women, handicapped persons, and criminals.

In 1964, Hugh Moore became president of the Human Betterment Association and changed its name to Association for Voluntary Sterilization, (AVS). He continued to support the organization until his death in 1972.

Many people, who were convinced of the population problem by the Malthusains, sought voluntary sterilization. Among these were many upper class educated persons, much to the displeasure of the Eugenisists. At the same time, physicians were beginning to prescribe sterilizations more and more.

The result of this trend were clear by 1965. In just that one year a total of sixty-nine thousand tubal litigations were done to noninstitutional women. These were all privately funded. In 1966 the government began funding sterilization of the working and welfare poor, under Title XIX of the Social Security Act. Clinics, funded by Health, Education and Welfare, have been doing sterilizations since the mid-sixties. From 1969-1974, H.E.W. increased its family planning budget from fifty-one million dollars to over 250 million dollars. Since 1970 female sterilizations have increased three hundred percent.

In the Kaw Tribe (Native American), located in Oklahoma, all of the pureblood women have been sterilized. Thus, this is the last generation that will ever exist.

The Rockefeller foundation financed more than 400,000 sterilizations in Columbia from 1963-1965.

In 1973 the Puerto Rican government printed a document in which a correlation between overpopulation and unemployment was made. Their solution was sterilization. The unemployment rate in Puerto Rico is almost fifty percent, and under the sterilization campaign in Puerto Rico, 35 to 38 percent of the women in Puerto Rico are sterilized.

Facts reveal that the majority of Third World women who are sterilized were not properly informed about the operation. This constitutes sterilization abuse.

Saying good bye to yesterday

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

"Take good care of the files Terrell."
"Hey Angela you're a senior, come over and a have your picture taken."
"So you're not coming back, huh?"

I have heard many comments pertaining to being a senior and leaving the university. Yet the one comment that caused the most reflection was said by me just last night in the midst of an energetic, last issue, let everything out Collegian party. Going through the files of Black Affairs I suddenly turned and ever so solemn, simply said, "Take good care of the files Terrell." This statement threaten to unnerve my composure as it was the first time I felt I would actually be breaking a bond.

No more coming down to the office early and leaving late.

No more coming down to the office early and leaving early to catch a concert

No more sending the last page down to the printers only to have the telephone ring or a person run in telling of a late breaking story.

No more intentions of meeting the 8:30 deadline for copy only to have group of friends "drop in to visit" and everybody ending up burning the 'midnight oil.'

What is really frightening is my concern about the future of our community at UMass. So much has happened during my years here, that I am honestly skeptical and pessimistic about the state of things to come.

I realize that I am being very vague. This is intentional. After much thought about this, I felt it to be the best way to express my feelings.

Upon first entering UMass, I had so much drive, energy and hope. Now on the verge of leaving, I have very little drive, energy or hope and the events leading up to last night's meeting has done little to quell my fears.

Funny, I was told this would happen by various seniors I met and talked to in my freshmen year. How well do I remember, "Wait until you are in your senior year and then see if you still feel the same way." I heard this many times in reference to the many ideas and high levels of aspirations our freshmen class seemed to bring in with them.

I have no more to give. Something is happening to our community and I find it difficult to pinpoint it, but enough of my vagueness.

You know, it really isn't that difficult to say good-bye to yesterday.

From the staff

The Black Affairs Staff sends out its thanks to all those of the community who has supported us in our efforts to bring third world news to some prominence this semester.

We feel the Black Affairs publishes under the most limited means and that it could become a more viable and responsive publication with more help from those of the community. Black Affairs will be back next semester, but we feel that the paper could become a larger force in our lives and something that we could draw deep pride in publishing with the help of more people from the community. We feel that we have done an admirable job under our limited conditions, but we are not striving for admireability we are striving for excellence. In excellence in layout, content of publication, its services to the community and host of other excellences that would be too numerous to name. Once again we would like to thank you for your support and we will be looking for more of it next semester and in the years to come.

Campus Center BOG against lounge carpet

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

Members of the Campus Center Board of Governors and their supporters will try to block the start of renovations on the Cape Cod lounge today.

"We plan to stay there 24 hours a day until the administration agrees to come in and talk to us about this," said Shelly Gordon, chairman of the board.

The board of governors directs and advises on policy and budgetary manners within the Campus Center and the Student Union buildings. Both buildings are being paid for out of student fee monies.

The controversy centers over administration plans to carpet the entire Cape Cod lounge. The board wants to carpet only half of the lounge. Gordon last night said she feels if the entire room was carpeted, many activities would be excluded.

"Activities such as the MS hair cutting fund raiser would be excluded. People wouldn't be able to bring their food in the room," said Gordon.

Campus Center director William Harris said he thinks the carpeting would "open up the area to more activities than it is used for now."

According to Harris, plans for renovating the lounge have been in the works for about a year and a half. "The first plan, which was drawn up in December of 1976, called for a series of raised, carpeted platforms along with new drapes and repainting of the walls.

The plan was changed last summer, eliminating the platforms, said Harris.

The present plan calls for carpeting the entire floor, repainting the walls, and putting in new drapes furniture. The plan would cost about $22,000, which is half the cost of the original plan, according to Harris.

Earthfoods is presently set up in the lounge. Hillel and the Haymakers also use the lounge for dancing.

Malcom Quint, a former board chairman and member of Earthfoods, said he was told last Monday that they would have to be out of the lounge by today. "We had scheduled the lounge through Wednesday, which is our last day this semester," said Quint. Earthfoods had originally wanted to move into the space permanently, but the board turned their request down.

Gordon said Hillel has expressed opposition to the cwrpeting because it would force them to move their dancing to the Commonwealth Room. "They don't like the room because it is to close to the Student Union Ballroom. When there is a movie or a speech in the ballroom, it will interfere with their music," said Gordon.

Harris said the wall between the ballroom and the Commonwealth room would be soundproofed so that there would be no interference. He also said that the dancer had told him they had no objections to moving into the Commonwealth room. Gordon said she felt it wouldn't be possible to soundproof the room because "the capacity for the SUB is based in part on the Commonwealth room. They wouldn't be able to wall off the Commonwealth room because of fire laws." The two rooms are presently separated by a folding wall.

The board passed a motion two weeks ago calling for a moratorium on any renovations until students have had a chance to provide their views of the situation. According to the board's constitution, the chancellor has 15 days to veto any motion or it becomes Campus Center policy.

Gordon said she has heard nothing from the chancellor's office concerning the renovations.

"Bromery hasn't responded to any of our motions in the past year, so we aren't sure if he recognizes our constitution or not," said Gordon.

Gordon also said that Harris is violating the constitution by going ahead with the renovations.

"Any dispute between the BOG and the director has to be submitted to a third party. The director isn't allowed to go ahead and do what he pleases."

Harris said he has the right to go ahead because state funds are involved. "We're spending trust funds; the carpet has already been purchased. The contractor was supposed to place it down in March, but we held off because the dancers requested us to wait until the end of classes. I won't be accused of misusing state funds. We have enough mismanagement around here."

Gordon planned to stay in Campus Center all night and to check to "make sure that they don't try to remove the tables and clean the floor during the night. We believe that it will take them about an hour to remove everything." Quint said that Earthfoods plans to serve meals in the lounge today. After that, Gordon said, people will stay there to make sure no work is done. "My sleeping bag is in the office now," Gordon said.

Quint said the main purpose of the protest is "not to create a crisis situation but to get Whitmore involved as it should be."

'Average' students speak at graduation ceremony

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The two student speakers at this year's Commencement think they have something to offer graduating seniors that students get all too infrequently: an average student's perspective.

Neither Linda C. Ananiann or Daniel A. Muse, chosen last week to speak at the May 27 ceremonies, have been active in student groups, campus governance, media or any political aspect of the University.

The speakers this year offer a contrast to the 1977 Commencement student speakers — Brett Parent, former Massachusetts Daily Collegian editor-in-chief; and Bryan Harvey, former student senator and Student Government Association communications coordinator.

Ananian, a 21-year-old astronomy major from Melrose, Massachusetts, said yesterday she hasn't been involved in any school organization since she was literary editor of her high school yearbook.

But she says she hopes her five-minute speech can help graduation mean "something personal to the students."

Ananian said she is a "compulsive" writer and submitted her speech because "I really enjoyed the four years here and I wanted to relate that."

She said she kept her speech "as a political as I think the University students are."

Muse, a 22-year-old native of Brookline, Massachusetts, said he purposely stayed away from politics in his speech, even though he majored in political science and fulfilled the requirements for a degree in economics.

Instead he said he thought something needs to be said about the quality education of UMass, despite what he said was the eastern Massachusetts reverance for private higher education.

He said he thought a degree from UMass was "quite an accomplishment...something to be proud of," and that he wanted to speak against the inferiority complex that hovers over the school.

"I was stunned," he said, when he was told his speech was one of two chosen from the 17 submitted earlier this year. "I consider it quite an honor".

Muse is a Pi Sigma Alpha and Phi Beta Kappa student was on the soccer team his freshman year, and went to Alabama University on exchange during his junior year.

Both students were chosen by an 11-member student committee working out of Office of the Student Affairs.

Plenty of tickets left for senior day event

By PAULA STROLLO
Collegian Staff

Senior Day.

The Chancellor's Reception for Graduating Seniors.

The final celebration before graduation.

Twenty undergraduate students have been faithfully working this semester planning the annual Senior Day event, to be held on the Northeast Quad May 25. The raindate is May 26 in the Worcester Dining Commons.

By 1:30 p.m. yesterday on the Campus Center concourse, 935 out of a possible 3,500 tickets had been sold — $2 for seniors and $3 for guests. Tickets will be sold today on the concourse and will also be available on Senior Day.

For entertainment David Johanson and The Burning Rose, Billy Falcon and Bev Roller have been booked.

Johanson was previously with The New York Dolls. The band presently records with Blue Sky records and plays mostly New Wave Rock. They recently received reviews in The Rolling Stone, The Boston Phoenix and The Valley Advocate, said Bonnie Levetin, Program Council Committee member.

Recording for United Artists, Billy Falcon is a New York City group who plays mostly rock and roll.

Bev Roller, a local jazz-rock band has played at The Rusty Nail.

With an allocated budget of $12,000 from the Recognized Student Activities office, beer, non-alcoholic beverages, music and food will be provided. Ticket holders are entitled to a Senior Day mug.

"All beverages are free of charge with the mug. University Food Services will serve hot dogs and hamburgers for 50 cents apiece," said Patty Edmunds, Senior Day Committee member.

According to Ed Madden, committee member, 120 kegs have been ordered.

Nikki Aronson, chairperson for the committee added, "last year we went through 119 kegs. You can be sure we'll have enough this year to accommodate the crowd."

Also on the Senior Day agenda is a 'Senior Day T Shirt Raffle.' Committee member Jeff Shapiro said about 150 T-shirts will be given away.

For those interested in pouring beer, there is a sign-up sheet at the Senior Day booth.

"It's been a lot of fun putting this together, and I think it's going to be even better reaping the rewards with my mug," said Aronson.

As Patty Edmunds said for all seniors, "I started out at a beer party, I may as well end at one."

UM police quiet about a.m. frisk

UMass police yesterday would not release any information about an incident where they were seen frisking a man on Massachusetts Avenue at 4:42 a.m. yesterday morning after stopping the green Fiat he was driving.

Police would only tell the Collegian the car had broken down. A Collegian reporter who witnessed the incident said the car had a UMass parking sticker.

Police would give out no further information about the incident when contacted last night by the Collegian.

Wood seen in line for senate seat

Former UMass President Robert C. Wood is waiting in the wings to announce his candidacy for the U.S. Senate seat currently held by Sen. Edward Brooke, (R-Mass), according to a United Press International report.

Wood could not be reached for comment last night.

Also challenging Brooke will be U.S. Rep. Paul Tsongas, (D-Mass); Ruth Morgenthau, UMass trustee and an official on UN Ambassador Andrew Young's staff; state Rep. Michael J. Connolly, (D-Boston), who visited UMass last week; state Rep. Elaine Noble (D-Boston); and conservative Republican Avi Nelson.

Tsongas said yesterday he will announce his candidacy later this week.

Tsongas said Brooke is vulnerable after 12 years in the Senate, because the people of the state have a perception that Brooke is not interested in what is happening in Massachusetts.

"No one has seen him five years, and there is a feeling that no one would see him again," Tsongas said.

Asked why he was taking on such a well-entrenched politician, Tsongas said, "If I were overly cautious I would still be on the Lowell City Council."

Morganthau recently said she will officially announce her candidacy "very soon."

Morganthau said she sees Brooke as "vulnerable" on the "issues like defense spending and his general accountability, or lack of it, to Massachusetts voters over the last 12 years."

Earlier this week, Lt. Gov. Thomas O'Neill III said he had decided not to run against Brooke.

"I respected his right to enter the race. I think it shows there is a race worth running," Morganthau said.

Vets warned of defoilant

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Veterans Administration has warned its offices across the country to watch for after-effects among veterans of the Vietnam defoliant "Agent Orange" which some researchers suspect of possible links with cancer or genetic defects, officials said yesterday.

Thousands of servicemen were exposed to Orange, the most effective and heavily used of various defoliation compounds of which more than 100 million pounds were sprayed over one-seventh of South Vietnam's land area between 1962 and 1971.

A VA spokesman confirmed instructions have gone by telephone a month ago to 370 hospitals and regional offices to report on symptoms traceable to contact with Orange, a mixture of two chemical compounds known as 2-4-5-T and 2-4-D.

Campus works toward dorm lease completion

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The lease negotiating team consisting of students and administrators will submit a model dormitory lease and relevant policies to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery by Sept. 15.

The team, set up following the takeover of the Whitmore administration building April 6, met for its 11th session yesterday and discussed further negotiations between the students and administrators.

The takeover last month involved 150 students demanding rights for students tenants in dormitories who broke through a locked door in Whitmore to occupy a portion of Bromery's office.

On the night of the takeover, a set of demands was signed by students and administrators agreeing to submit a lease or housing contract mutually satisfactory to both sides by Sept. 15.

To date, the lease negotiating team has complied with the demand to submit an interim document to Bromery by May 1 and yesterday said they will have the lease on his desk by the September date.

The interim document included 17 points and dealt specifically with criteria for termination of the contract, satisfactory maintenance of dormitories by the University, damage policies, and students' roles in present and future negotiations and discussions.

Bromery Monday responded to the interim report by reminding the negotiators that the UMass Board of Trustees "has ultimate responsibility and will be mindful of legal ramifications, fiscal consequences, and the experience of other universities with similar written housing agreements."

Bromery also questioned the appropriateness of one of the items on the interim report which stated the University should place higher priority to repairs assigned to dormitories rather than academic buildings.

The chancellor said in his reply that the item regarding student input in negotiations "will require ver careful discussions so that no misunderstandings develop."

Yesterday's session was one of a series of talks trying to define the nature of a long standing Residential Committee which would be responsible for policy making in regard to student leases and housing problems. The committee would consist of students and administrtors and would be advisory to the chancellor, if the students get their way.

The administration wants the committee to be advisory to the vice-chancellor for student affairs, according to David Barenberg, a student negotiator and member of the Student Organizing Project.

Further negotiations will be held next week and throughout the summer to compose the lease and plans for the Residential Committee. Barenberg said the students and administrators disagree on several points concerning the committee composition.

Disagreements include objections to whom the committee will be advisory to, (the chancellor or vice-chancellor) whether the lease and relevant policies must first be ratified annually by a majority vote of the on-campus residential area governments, selection processes for student committee members and their accountability to respective area governments.

The Residential Committee proposed by the student negotiators would be responsible for constructing a lease and determining policy decisions regarding tenant eligibility, special interest corridors, changing room assignments, fees and date of due bills, guidelines for financial hardship, designing the security system and more.

A separate Residential Appeals Committee would deal with student grievances through appeals procedures involving rebates brokecivontract terms, termination of contract, and landlord decisions, according to Barenberg.

Barenberg said the lease to be presented to the chancellor is one of three sections of the housing contract process. While the lease must be submitted to the trustees for approval, Barenberg said a general campus document will be submitted to the chancellor by the Residential Committee and each dormitory will be responsible for constructing a specific dorm contract.

Small town HS grads expect 5,000 guests

ARAPAHOE, Colo. [UPI] — This tiny eastern Colorado farming town has a population of 65, and nine graduating high school seniors. But commencement exercises are expected to draw up to 5,000.

The reason is Billy Carter is coming to town.

"I'm not really sure, but I think we'll have anywhere from 3,000 to 5,000 here. Some people have been talking about 35,000, but I doubt that," said Dr. Harold Tuttle, superintendent of Arapahoe District R-3.

Carter, the loquacious brother of the president, has agreed to speak to the nine graduating seniors at Arapahoe High School tonight. Although he normally charges a fee, this time Carter has agreed to speak for free.

Leonard Robinson, 17, the president of the senior class, said the students were very surprised when Carter agreed to speak.

"We had a class meeting one day and our faculty sponsor, Mary Glad, suggested that we ask Billy Carter and we all laughed," Robinson said. "But then we decided, why not, and the class secretary, Russell Halley, wrote him a letter.

"About a week or two later we got a letter back accepting the invitation. We were really surprised."

Arapahoe, which has no motels, no cafes, and only one gasoline station, is preparing as well as it can for the huge number of visitors. The ceremonies will be held in the football field west of the main school building.

FAC will host auditions for theater's critical year

Auditions for the Commonwealth Stage's 1978 Summer season will be held this Saturday and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Frank Prentice Rand Theater in the Fine Arts Center.

The Commonwealth Stage is in its second season. Last summer, the theater group drew an estimated 10,000 from the Pioneer Valley. David Knauf, founder and executive producer, said the summer season is most critical to the American theater scene.

"With the lack of pressure from big Broadway investors, regional professional theaters such as the Commonwealth Stage, which was once considered Broadways's stepchild, are now bringing theatre to Broadway," he said.

Knauf cited "Man of La Mancha," "1776," and "The Shadow Box" as examples of plays that began in regional theaters and achieved national importance.

"Theater in the Works," the Commonwealth Stage's summer season, will feature four original scripts by new American playwrights. The plays will be performed in workshop format July 7th - 30th by a company of professional actors, directors, and designers on the Rand Theater stage.

The specific plays and playwrights for the summer season will be announced the week of June first. Rehearsals will begin July 1. Auditions will be conducted by Knauf and a group of company stage managers. It is not necessary for community actors to make an appointment or prepare audition material.

One of the summer plays will be chosen for production in the fall season. Other productions scheduled for the fall include "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" from September 1st - 23rd and Bernard Shaw's "Misalliance" from September 29 - October 21.

"Equus", Peter Shaffer's award-winning drama, will begin October 27. This will be the first time that this play will be performed by a regional theater company.

The season will close with J.M. Barrie's "Peter Pan," which will run December 1 to 23.

Ethiopia moves against guerrillas

NAIROBI, Kenya [UPI] — Ethiopia yesterday launched a massive military offensive against secessionist guerrillas in northern Eritrea province on the strategic Red Sea oil route and smashed through the rebel's first line of troops surrounding the capital of Asmara.

Rebel spokesmen said the government's two -pronged attack involved more than 20,000 troops, tanks and heavy air, naval and ground bombardment and was the "largest offensive ever launched by the Ethiopians."

An official of the Eritrean Liberation Front said a 20,000-man Ethiopian column was battering its way out of Asmara, which is ringed by rebel troops, and added that it had "penetrated the forward defense lines" of the guerrillas.

Thousands of other government forces attacked rebel positions along the second arm of the pincer along Eritrea's Red Sea coastline. A naval bombardment was reported near the port of Assab.

Before the Ethiopian counteroffensive, Ethiopian forces had tried repeatedly but unsuccessfully to break through the rebel defense lines that have encircled Asmara since last fall.

But backed by massive Soviet arms shipments and 17,000 Cuban troops, the central Addis Ababa government was determined to crush the secessionists whose 17-year war for independence is the longest ongoing conflict in the world.

Eritrea hugs the Red Sea coast line and is Ethiopia's only land route to the sea. A government victory would give the Soviets access to the vital Western oil shipping route through the Red Sea from the Persian Gulf to the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean Sea.

The guerrillas have seized control of about 95 percent of Eritrea province, which they claim Ethiopia unlawfully annexed.

Ethiopian ruler Mengistu Haile Mariam, in a speech announcing the start of the counterattack, said the Soviet Union, Cuba South Yemen and East Germany were helping the Ethiopian forces.

"The blood of many of our brothers is being shed every hour and many of them are dying," he said in a speech broadcast yesterday. "The genuine progressive comrades whom we have mentioned above are living with us, dying with us and fighting with us, standing side by side with the broad masses of Ethiopia."

After its swift victory over Somalia in the Ogaden war in March, Ethiopia began airlifting thousands of troops into Eritrea for a showdown with the guerrillas.

The government also moved to the north many of the 50 warplanes recently supplied by the Soviet Union in a $1 billion arms deal and stepped up its aerial attacks on guerrilla positions.

Military analysts said with their overwhelming firepower and support of Cuba and Soviet Union, the Ethiopians could be expected to recapture some of the major Eritrean towns currently in guerrilla hands.

Soviets aid Ethiopia in rebel war; mideast oil route control at stake

NAIROBI, Kenya [UPI] — A government victory in the 17-year war against secessionist guerrillas in northern Eritrea province could give the Soviet Union bases that control or at least threaten vital Middle East oil supply routes.

Now that the Soviets and Cubans have joined the Ethiopian government's long-awaited counteroffensive, government officials spoke optimistically of a quick end to the fighting, the world's longest ongoing war.

Independent military analysts, however, predicted a conflict that would stretch on for years after a series of initial government victories.

Simply, neither side now appeared to possess a knockout punch.

NEWS ANALYSIS

An estimated 40,000 well-armed, mountainwise guerrillas as late as last year appeared on the verge of victory and independence for the rugged territory — a mix of jagged mountains, gorges and sandblasted plains packed into Ethiopia's far north.

By fall, the rebels had captured 95 per cent of the province, won the allegiance and enthusiastic backing of the overwhelming majority of the 3 million population and pushed the demoralized Ethiopian army back into the provincial capital of Asmara, the ports of Massawa and Assab and several smaller garrisons.

Two events then dramatically changed Eritrea's future.

The Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front late last year launched an attack on Massawa.

It would have been the most spectacular victory of the war, but instead turned into the rebels' heaviest defeat with thousands of guerrillas killed and wounded.

More ominously for the guerrillas, both the Soviet Union and Cuba actively came to the help of Ethiopia in the Ogaden conflict with Somalia.

Moscow poured $1 billion worth of military equipment into Ethiopia, including some 150 tanks and 50 warplanes, and 1,000 Soviet advisers to help training.

Much of this equipment is already in use in Eritrea.

The Cubans sent 17,000 troops and at least 500 of these have already been dispatched to Asmara.

The Soviets had a major naval and air base in Berbera, Somalia, which had the capability of threatening the sea routes for Middle East oil from Saudi Arabia, Iran and other Middle East oil-producing nations. They lost this when Somalia ousted the Russians earlier this year.

U.S. intelligence reports said the Soviet facilities at Berbera included facilities for fast missile-equipped vessels.

An Ethiopian victory in Eritrea, on the Red Sea just to the north of Somalia, once again could give the Russians based that could control or at least threaten Middle East oil supply routes.

In addition, there have been reports of Cubans in South Yemen just across the Gulf of Aden from Somalia that could control the strait leading from the Gulf of Aden into the Red Sea. The Suez Canal is at the north end of the Red Sea.

Carter to review US policy on Africa in light of Soviet-Cuban military role

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter has begun a major review of U.S. African policy in light of the alarming spread of Soviet-Cuban military intervention there, State department officials said Tuesday.

One official said that, with the renewed outbreak of warfare in Zaire, the Soviets and Cubans now appear to be directly or indirectly involved in five of the seven armed conflicts underway in Africa.

Carter told bipartisan congressional leaders Tuesday morning he is "gravely concerned" he may be unable to help African allies effectively because of the restrictions Congress has placed on the granting of foreign military aid.

He is prevented, for example, from sending arms to Zaire under legislation blocking military credit sales to any nation that owes for previous purchases. Zaire reportedly is $400,000 behind in paying U.S. military aid debts.

A Pentagon spokesman, meantime, said the United States reviewing Zaire's request for a speed-up in shipments of the communications equipment and aircraft parts it was granted during last year's invasion of Shaba province.

Zairean rebels have once again invaded the copper-rich province from bases in Zambia and Angola. They reportedly hold thousands of foreigners captive in the provincial capital of Kolwezi.

Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seko has claimed the invaders include Cuban troops, although U.S. officials said they had no evidence to confirm that.

One State Department official, however, said the U.S. assessment is that the Soviets and Cubans are involved — either by conducting military training, providing weapons or in direct combat roles — in every armed conflict now underway in Africa except those in Chad and the western Sahara.

He said they have some involvement in the hostilities in Zaire, Ethiopia's conflicts with Somalia and Eritrea, the black rebel battles in Rhodesia and Namibia and Angola's sporadic guerrilla fighting.

As a result, officials said Carter is looking at a list of possibilities for counteracting the Soviet-Cuban threat, including more active U.S. military assistance programs.

They said his first course of action will be to press efforts to mediate political settlements of such racially based disputes as those in Rhodesia and South African-administered Nampbia.

But they said the president believes that course may be only a delaying action in light of the Soviet-Cuban drive, and wants to drum up national, bipartisan support for other forms of practical aid to allies under attack.

"The real question that the president is facing," one official said, "is: 'What if the political approach doesn't work?'"

"There has to be some kind of national will to do things and Congress has to be involved.

Health program cited as one of country's best

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Another popular student myth bit the dust when a survey team from the American College Health Association cited the UMass Health Services as one of the best health programs in the country.

In a letter to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, the team lauded the Health Services as "a well integrated, educationally-oriented health care system which is being made available to the students of the University at an incredibly reasonable price."

Director of the University Health Service Barry Averill said he was "personally delighted" with the contents of the letter.

Averill said, "Without a responsive and supportive student body, we wouldn't have had the resources to build a fine program."

Averill cited the results of a recent survey, showing a "significant increase in the level of satisfaction" of students with the health service compared to an identical survey taken in 1970. The survey showed that satisfaction with the quality of care, the costs and waiting times have increased.

Averill found the survey "very supportive" and said he is pleased the results have been "confirmed" by an outside panel of consultants.

Noting the level of student satisfaction is 90 percent, Averill said this level was very high as normal levels of satisfaction are closer to 70 and 80 percent. Women students especially tend to be more satisfied than women at schools such as Harvard and Yale, he said. He added that the health services receives more compliments than complaints.

The survey team also said they were impressed with the "calibre of the professional staff" as well as the "scope, depth, and quality" of the health program itself.

The survey team also examined the Valley Health Plan describing it as "a unique and impressive way in which an institution of higher education can become an integral part of its community".

The survey team consisted of several doctors from Harvard, in addition to others.

Woodbury is out of town and was unavailable for comment.

Averill said he sees the survey results as a recognition of the hard work that a lot of people have put in over the past five years. Averill added the survey results were especially nice because "you usually hear from people only when they are finding fault."

Averill said the Valley Health Plan was responsible for a January reimbursement of $50,000 to the student health trust fund which is used to keep the health fees from going up. The economic advantages of the Valley Health Plan has led to increased specialty services and low-cost comprehensive accessible care, he said.

The Valley Health Plan was started at UMass a few years ago. It enables the university employees to use the health services by paying a membership fee.

Educational aspects of the Health Services include four-credit courses, colloqs, and workshops, all geared towards the "education of the whole person, lasting beyond their four years at UMass." There are presently 100 students pursuing health careers now receiving practical experience through the health services.

Cindy Brack, a member of the Student Health Advisory Board said the certification team that came here was requested by university officials. Certification is not a prerequisite for belonging to the American College Health Association.

Brack said certification is like a "good seal of approval. Certification allows people to measure you and places you on the map, so to speak."

The American College Health Association held a conference in New Orleans in late March, which Brack attended. She said, "We went there not knowing what to expect. We found that we (Health Services) have a lot more to offer than other schools."

Pentagon alerts military; Zaire evacuation possible

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Pentagon alerted Army paratroopers and Air Force transport units yesterday in the event they are needed to evacuate American civilians from embattled Zaire.

The Defense Department stressed that "no deployment of personnel or aircraft has been ordered."

The alert affects units of the 82nd Airborne Division at Ft. Bragg, N.C., and Military Airlift Command planes which will move to Pope Air Force Base near Ft. Bragg, the Pentagon said.

The Defense Department declined to provide details of the number of troops and planes affected by the alert.

For the second time in 14 months, rebel insurgents are attempting to take over Shaba Province in Zaire, a Central African nation that was a former Belgian colony.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said the first concern of the United States is the welfare of 73 American citizens residing in the Kolwezi area of southern Zaire, which has been the focal point of the new fighting.

Sixty-two of the Americans living in Zaire are employees of the Morrison-Knudsen firm, based in Idaho, which has been constructing a power project in Kolwezi. The other Americans include nine missionaries, one employee of a copper firm and one tourist.

Earlier Tuesday, at a breakfast meeting with congressional leaders, President Carter suggested he would like Congress to ease its restrictions on his power to send U.S. military aid abroad.

Carter, who is concerned about renewed fighting in Zaire, indicated such legislation "would be very welcome", House Minority Leader John Rhodes said after the meeting.

Rhodes said, however, that Carter did not specifically request a relaxation of the controls, which were enacted in the wake of the Vietnam war.

Loder wrong man for job

To the Editor:

I am a member of the National Student Exchange program at the end of my stay here at UMass. In the past year I have come to love New England and the school and I will always regard my stay here as one of the highlights of my life.

Though my times here have been largely pleasant, one aspect of my schooling has left me with a sour taste in my mouth. And that concerns my dealings with Mr. William Loder, the National Student Exchange coordinator.

The coordinator is to serve as our friend, parent and counselor. Yet, in all of my dealings with Mr. Loder I have known him to be none of these. On the rare occasions when this busy man was able to fit me into his busy schedule for five minutes, I was treated to profanity, rudeness and a total lack of concern for any problems I might have.

On one occasion I asked this busy man to co-sign a short-term loan for me. "No way" was his immediate response. Then after scanning the two-page form, he cried, "You mean I have to fill out this fucking thing?" Obviously not.

Unfortunately, I am not being singled out by this busy man for shabby treatment. Both exchange students and potential exchangers have come out of his office wondering, like I have, how this man was ever placed in a position whose main task is to comfort and aid students in an unfamiliar surroundings.

Like Mr. Loder, I don't have the time to go into specifics of our other encounters. Suffice to say they were brief and to the point: "Can't you see I'm busy. Come back some other time."

Well, I won't be back for more rude treatment from this busy man, but unfortunately others will have to deal with him. It is not my intention to discourage others from participating in this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. Instead, I hope that the Administration realizes that a person in the capacity of exchange coordinator must be accessible, patient and most of all understanding. Such qualities are foreign to Mr. Loder.

Nummo News Anti-Semetic

To the Editor:

It is with profound disgust, anger and indignation that we write this letter in a unified voice to strongly condemn the May 15 edition of Nummo News with its overtly anti-Semitic context.

Nummo News has once again vehemently attacked Israel, Zionism and consequently the Jewish People in this week's edition. One thing was different this time; being the end of the semester, this edition contained no less than four articles dedicated solely to anti-Israeli [hence anti-Jewish] propaganda that parrot the party lines of the totalitarian communist regime of the Soviet Union and its puppet mouthpiece in the Middle East, the PLO. One only has to recall the anti-Israel stance Nummo News took last year on the Israeli rescue mission to Entebbe in Idi Amin's blood soaked Uganda to fully comprehend the extremes to which this paper will go in its vicious campaign of hate against the Jewish people.

We also question the moral validity of the Student Senate's funding of this propaganda sheet [at $9000 per year] and to take it one step further, the exclusiveness of the Collegian being used as a vehicle to disseminate to the campus community this decree of hatred.

For the first time in 30 years a glimmer of Peace is shining in the Mid-East, but Nummo News, in its "infinite wisdom", still espouses the complete obliteration of the State of Israel. This, Nummo News says, can be achieved only through "armed Revolution". In the less glorious, more basic vocabulary of war, however, this comes to mean death, destruction and despair. These have been the basic pillars of all war throughout history. No fancy words or synonyms can or ever will cover up the true meaning of war, however, Nummo News seems to think so with its constant espousal of the glory of Revolution. We only hope that someday the writers of Nummo News will be able to pull themselves out of the pits of barbarism and into the light of peaceful coexistence with their sisters and brothers of all the peoples of the world.

Credit union crippled

To the Editor:

As the Board of Directors of the University of Massachusetts Student Federal Credit Union, elected representatives of over 3200 credit union members within the University community, we would like to express our outrage at the apparent irresponsibility of the Student Senate's actions on Monday night.

Without considering the individual merits of each group's budget, the Senate passed a motion to reduce the budgets of approximately 45 RSO groups by a total of nearly $116,000, including the elimination of the Credit Union budget [RSO No. 846] in its entirety. We recognize that this action will present severe hardships for all of the affected groups, and threaten the very existence of some, but must address our comments to the impact upon the Credit Union.

At present, the Credit Union maintains the deposits for 3200 students and has granted loans totaling more than $500,000 to over 1,100 students. In addition, the Credit Union offers many other financial services to these members and other members of the University community, including food stamp redemption, money order and traveler check sales, financial counseling, and check cashing facilities. Without external funding, the Credit Union will be forced to drastically reduce the number of services offered in an effort to cut costs. Specifically, the Board of Directors is considering the elimination of all check cashing services.

Funding of the Credit Union represents an investment by the Student Senate, and the Undergraduate student body as a whole, in the financial self-determination of students within the University community. Thus, the unwillingness of the Senate to fund a portion of the Credit Union's operations represents a refusal to invest in and support the facility by which University students may manage their own finances.

College annoyance

To the Editor:

This being the last day of classes of my college career I feel compelled to say some things that have built up inside me for four years. This university has created more complications in my once simple life that I would have imagined possible, between the always confused course schedules, Whitmore bureaucracy, housing, financial aid, roommate problems, and a myriad of annoyances this place has taught me one invaluable lesson: I've learned how to cope. When a new problem came up, I learned how to deal with it and became that much more efficient at getting around them. I firmly believe that I could not have received a better education anywhere in this state. The diversified people here, the unbelievable variety of things to do and our many options as students cannot be matched by any school in the area. I am so tired of hearing our school put down as a zoo, or factory; we make it what it is. You couldn't have paid me to go anywhere else. The people I've met are fabulous. The professors have almost all been concerned with my welfare and have been dynamic people in their own right. The housing situation taught me to deal with individuals on a day to day basis. The size of the university taught me to thrive on the vast opportunities here. The hassles and their inevitable solutions have given me a new self-confidence and patience. I LOVE IT HERE and it saddens me to leave it all behind, but it's time to go. To all the frustrated people who are pissed off at the hassles this university can present to our daily lives: just remember that each one you persevere through is going to help you in the "real world". If you can make it through the University of Massachusetts you can make it through ANYTHING in life and be proud of it because anyone who makes it deserves to be proud. Don't waste four short years bitching about the place or you'll miss all the good times! GOOD-BYE UMASS I'LL MISS YOU!

Liberal arts not snobbery

To the Editor:

I was recently amused by the letter written by Steven Feldman [5-15] entitled "the Pursuit of Education" in which Mr. Feldman attacked the idea of a liberal arts education as being an education in snobbery, and then went on to question the purpose of a liberal arts education in our present day society. In this very narrow letter, Mr. Feldman attacks the liberal arts major on the grounds that scientific, engineering, and business majors are taught specific skills so they will be beneficial to their societies as well as themselves. But, says Feldman, a liberal arts education teaches no skill unless "one considers it a skill to be able to haggle over the meaning of life."

A liberal arts education is not designed to be channeled into one particular skill. In fact, it is primarily aimed at giving the student a broader view of education. Liberal Arts on the whole covers anything from the sciences to humanities to great works of literature. By studying these the student is given the broad view not confined to the narrow discipline of learning a particular skill. It seems that Mr. Feldman believes that a liberal arts education can serve no further purpose to our society. This is a foolish assumption. While it is very important to be able to build bridges.

Where I'm comin' from

dr. sandstrom

Well the caffiene and finals have gotten to me again. Yesserie, its another end of semester and things are bad for the touchy feely crowd.

Think of what staying up till all hours of the night does to your touch-feely proclivities. How can you have real 'eye to eye' contact when your eyes look - aaa - road maps. How can you even attempt to touch another person's fingers under the table when your trembling so much you can't even find your own? And during finals things are really bad. Most professors really frown upon real interpersonal contact when you're taking tests.

Actually, the only good thing about finals and the end of the semester is the nuturant conversations you can engage in late hours of the night with your fellow hallmates or apartments mates:

"Hey man, I'm really bummed out, you know?

I know where your coming from.

Like the finals have been playing games with my head.

I can connect with your pain, reaaally.

Like, I'm just too involved with it.

Essentially, the whole thing is bogus.

Reaaaly.

I think we both know where were coming from.

I think so too.

Then what do we talk about?

Something like, nurturant.

How about earthy crunchy food?

Why don't we eat it instead.

Heeeeeey!

(pause while the two conversants indulge themselves insome healthy, earthy, crunchy, and so-good-for-you food. fill in the sounds of mastication.)

Have you like watered the plants lately.

Oh wow, I was just thinking of them.

Like, reaaally, some people say that they can communicate, you know?

Well, it's been like really tough on me. Like, I ain't been laid in six months, y'know.

Ya, I know whatcha mean. I been chewin' on ice cubes for like the longest time. Frustratuon city, Chomp, chomp, chomp, man.

Man, I'm tired of takin' them Penthouses into the bathroom. I hurt myself on one of the staples once, too. I hadda go to the infirmary to have it removed, an' everything.

Bummer. I know where you're comin' from.

Yeah, and them magazines take advantage of women. Sometimes I feel really sexist, y'know.

Before or after?

Sometimes during.

Yeh, I know where you're coming from. I could deal with it.

Really.

Yeh."

Essentially, you see what I mean. Didn't you find the above conversation nuturant? Huh? Didn'y ya?

Y'know, we should try to make our life here on Spaceship UMass as mellow as we can. I try to get mellow by reading Hegel and playing tonsil hockey. And I don't care if I win or not. It's very meditative. Like macrame.

Like the floweers start blooming in the spring, we, too, can bloom, and be mellow. If you're not uptight, that is. Nuturant is where it's at, man.

So, hey — put on the new Jackson Browne album, y'know, the one with "staaaayyyy, just a liddle bit long-onger" and just sit back, y'know, and dig life. Hey, take it easy.

Ya work all your life and ya then ya die. Right?

Dr. Sandstrom is a regular columnist for the Collegian, who is now in the infirmary recovering from severe tonsil hockey bruises and staple wounds. Y'know Later, man.

You can't buy friends

By RUSS SMITH

" ... Old friends. They mean much more to me than a new friend. 'Cause they can see where you are, and they know where you've been ... " (Thanks, Harry Chapin)

Friends, whether they be old or new, still mean a lot more than other things — or at least they should. Friends are more important than materialistic things; cars, stereo, basketball sneakers, everything. Even money (for what good is money if you have no friends to spend it with?).

Through years of this party and that, cruising the Amherst bar circuit; Poor Dicks, Timeout, Barsee's, Pub, Bluewall; and even in classes, acquaintances are made.

Some of these people — acquaintances remain just that, an acquaintance, while others somehow reach the higher level of familiarship called friends.

Friends are made in dorms — and other places of living; be it in the co-ed bathroom, or Sunday during halftime of a basketball game while quickly performing a washer to dryer transplant of one's clothes.

One of the sadder things about the ending of each spring semester is looking out the window — watching as the cars pull up, usually with a parent driving, and possibly with a smaller member of the family. Seemingly endless trips are taken from the room to the car, as it progressively fills with college-type belongings. Approximately thirty minutes (or more) later, a full car pulls away.

The consoling factor is that just a short three months from that time, that full car returns, and the car-to-room trips begin again.

Actually it's not the cars emptying out the campus that is sad — it's the friends in them, going their separate ways for the summer. They'll be back.

Except those who graduate.

And now it's time for me to fly the coop also. The people that have come to be my friends, and even acquaintances (people in classes whose name is unknown, but whose face is familiar) will be missed.

Seems strange that people I've known most of my stay here ('slightly over' the conventional four years) — those who I've partied with, done crazy things with, argued with, lived with, played intramurals with — it just seems strange that now the time has come for us to go our separate ways.

That we may never see each other — or hear from each other — again.

Some people would say, "Ah, that's life; you'll make new friends."

But I'm not worried about making new friends — I like the ones I have now. Oh, there will be the exchanges of addresses and the "I'll-keep-in-touch" promise. But at this time, those seem like more of a formality than a reality.

A friend: some one you can talk to in troubled times. Someone to shoot the shit with, have good times (and get over bad) with. Someone who'll do favors for you — and who'll do favors for you — because you want to. And occasionally, a source of financing (not the main objective behind a friend).

A friend — someone who keeps in touch with graduating friends.

I don't know. Maybe it's because I think friends are the best thing in the world to have. If I didn't have friends, I'd almost rather be dead.

Maybe it's me. Maybe I've been at UMass too long — maybe I'm not ready for the REAL world.

I guess I'll make new friends. I'm not gonna get into the real world and become a hermit. But I do believe college is the best four years in a person's life.

And the friends I've met here — and the people at UMass — are the best possible.

I'm gonna miss UMass. But even more, I'll miss the friends.

from our perspective

Sobering thoughts on a year's end

As we look back over our years at this University in general, and this newspaper in particular, it is a sobering thought to realize how few times we were sober. Reading assignments seem to meld into each other; "Tequila Mockingbird".... "Why can't Johnny Walker Read?".... "Decanter Berry Tales"....

Term papers too, poke about the memory; "An alcoholic vision", or "Seeing MD 20-20.".... "How to Use Your Head in a Family Situation" or "There's No Place Like Foam".....

Collegian experiences have been more fulfilling. I remember the semester we staggered into the wire room and there was a giant Gila monster on the UPI sports machine. God, he was spitting poisonous indigo-colored ink and screaming that Carl Yastrzemski went oh-for-four in a game against the Yankees. I pulled out my stainless-steel schick exacto-knife and slit open the beasts corotid artery.

The next day we had to replace the machine's typewriter ribbon.

Then there was the time when the filing cabinet damned near ate the Collegian attorney. He was standing in the middle of that blood-red carpet when the "A thru F" drawer lunged for his throat and tried to bite out the poor bastard's esophagus. He ducked, and the thing only killed a janitor.

It was then that the Campus Center Manager of Building Operations stepped into the office.

"Why is that janitor lying dead on the floor?" he demanded.

A few of us gathered around the corpse in question. I bent down to feel his pulse.

"He has no pulse," I announced. "And he couldn't make it to the couch."

The manager stood motionless for a moment and tried to speak. It was at this moment that drawer "G thru M" pounced.

"Aaaaaaaarrghghghgh!" screamed the Manager of Building Operations.

"Somebody better get that filing cabinet out of here," I suggested. "It's deranged."

Three of us went over to the remains of the cabinet and tipped the thing on its side, rendering it harmless.

"They don't know how to get out of that position," I wheezed. "Evolutionarily backward."

Alas, we are now graduating and will soon have only our memories to sustain us.

Can't take a joke

To the Editor:

As a woman student at this university who is well aware of the obstacles which exist for women in an essentially male dominated society, I am frankly sick and tired of the women on this campus who feel obligated to tell me how to think, feel, and to define what a legitimate feminine experience is. My experience is a feminine experience. I experience, as do all other women, varying degrees of sexism all the time.

In speaking with a woman recently, I made a joke which contained the word "girl." The word was an integral part of the joke, which I admit may not have been terribly funny, but her response bordered on the ridiculous. She felt obliged to tell me that she was a woman [as if I couldn't see that for myself].

After I decided to ignore her response, she then told me that she was being facetious. I replied that that was exactly what I was being. I was then informed that saying the word "girl" was not funny, and in fact was nothing to joke about, at which point she turned around and scampered away before I had a chance to continue the discussion.

The women's movement has done much to gain rights for many, but at the same time, lacks a sense of humor. No movement for social change should be so serious that it loses touch with the personal element. I don't feel that I need my consciousness "raised" by anyone who refuses to listen to my feelings on an issue and is concerned only with spouting rhetoric.

Professor deserves tenure

To the Editor:

I would like to voice my opinion on a matter which is personally disturbing to me. It concerns the termination of Professor John Marry. I don't know the whole story as to the reasons involved in this decision. However, I invite all administrators responsible for this course of action to attend a Greek Classics class which he teaches.

Upon doing so, I can't see the administrators feeling justified in actually enforcing their decision. I realize that I am only a student and administrators such as these are learned men but I think they just might learn something. They might learn that the vast majority of the class is in attendance. They might learn that the professor can make Greek history come alive. They might learn that they have in their presence a man of very high caliber.

I was under the impression that a school of higher education would value a character such as his and exhibit due respect to the gentlemen. After all, the learning process that he inspires is superb. It happens to cost me a lot to attend school and it disgusts me to know that next year I'll be paying more and getting less. Worse yet, they're playing with a man's life and future, and don't seem to care. I suggest that these administrators re-evaluate this ridiculousness or have their heads examined.

I might be only a student, but even I know that if a mistake is not corrected, another one is being made.

Jack Bresnahan

Index unfair to sororities

To the Editor:

On behalf of the University of Massachusetts Sorority System, I would like to express the feeling of the sororities toward the 1977 issue of the Index. We were dismayed at the quality of the photographs; surely something more appropriate could have been displayed instead of the large sexist picture of four University women. Looking at the photograph we cannot even be sure that they are members of our system.

We are an active part of this University: we are a residential living area, we are involved in activities, both internally and externally, and take pride in the fact that our scholarship rates very high in University standing. The image that is portrayed is not a true depiction of the caliber of the women involved in sororities. We don't feel that enough effort was put forth on the part of the Index staff to show this.

We are not superficial, brainless girls. Rather, we are striving, achieving young women who are not only working to improve ourselves, but also working to improve the people we live with as well as the University as a whole.

The University Sorority System hopes you will keep these ideas in mind when the next Index staff begins work on the 1978 issue of the Index.

C.A.T.E. corrections

To the Editor:

During the past week our office has received many requests forms. The forms have been sent out and should be arriving shortly. If anyone has any suggestions for the next guide or is willing to assist in cover-graphic-essay work please drop by Room 420 Student Union, Regarding the last publication: Zoology 221, 222, and 286B were reprints; Russian 112 was taught by Professor Stawieki alone; and Spanish 574, 590B were taught by Jose Monserrate, salary $20,000.

Many faculty who released last time around did not appear in "On The Other Hand". In the vast majority of instances the instructor's own department had not processed the computer type evaluations in advance of our deadlines.

Hopefully, that situation will be corrected this summer. And finally, Jay Flynn, who lent a large hand this past intersession, was mistakenly not listed as part of our staff.

UMie bids good-bye

To the Editor:

Now that my locks have been shorn and I've become the commercial traveller that I had so long and successfully postponed by my nine-and-a-half years as a UMie I must offer a final goodbye to the campus that has both nurtured and shielded me. Regarding the place, I have but two lingering complaints and an afterthought of the most minor significance: 1. the lack of easy and uncongested access to the Collegian; and 2. the bottleneck one faces when approaching the door at the bottom of the SUB's main stair; it is never open and few care to correct the situation. The afterthought: Charles Moran and the Eighteenth Century — may they forever stay where they belong.

Education is a right

To the Editor:

On May 15, 1978, members of the Students United for Public Education [S.U.P.E.] attended a Senate Ways and Means Committee meeting. We made a presentation which focused on two of the issues currently being acted upon in the Senate budget process: [1] no budget cuts and [2] no public monies to private schools. When asked if our public officials had a one hundred percent commitment to public education, Senators Kelly and Saltenstall [a graduate of Harvard] replied, emphatically, "No.".

We maintain that the budgets of the public schools should not be cut especially one realizes the extent of the public monies being channelled into the private schools. There is a twelve million dollar scholarship of which 75% must by law go to private schools. Harvard received 55% of last year's operating budget from public sources. And then they have the nerve to tell us there is not enough money for the public schools. The major reason why private schools are able to provide quality education is because they are able to usurp the public monies rightfully belonging to public schools and desperately needed.

The manner in which we ended up at the budget hearings deserves an airing. We first contacted the State House in March. We were informed that the budget hearings will take place in May. Furthermore, staff members of the House Ways and Means committee told us the hearings were public. We found out about the hearings the Friday before they took place, which was that Monday. We contacted the committee immediately to tell them we would like to address them. It was a shock to find out that the hearings were not public, that the public could only watch the proceedings. In fact, during the entire budgetary process, there are no public forums or hearings. We eventually got a chance to give our presentation through the personal intervention of Amherst Senator Olver, who coincidently happened to be on the Senate Ways and Means committee.

A similar process occurred when earlier in May when we requested the UMass Board of Trustees hold an open meeting. We wanted the open meeting so that SUPE and other students and student groups could express their views. Not granting an open meeting, we, as SUPE, were given time to speak. We invited various RSO groups and unions to share our time. We made a collective call for, among other things, no tuition increases. They thanked us for our "well prepared" presentations and as soon as we left, they raised our tuition.

SUPE is a broad based group of students attempting to promote quality public education. There are currently chapters at the Univeristy of Massachusetts, Amherst, and at Westfield State College.

Flag flying legal

To the Editor:

This letter is transmitted in response to Mr. Dennis Satterthwaite's letter which appeared in the May 15 issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian entitled: Flag Treated Carelessly.

The University appreciates Mr. Satterthwaite's concern for the United States flag which is flown continuously on campus. He is to be complimented for that concern. The flag should be treated with respect and dignity as a symbol of the United States of America.

The Federal Commission on House Administration, House Document Number 92-376, 1972, states that the United States flag may be flown at night for decorative purposes, if it is illuminated. In this particular case, the flag which flies adjacent to the Whitmore Administration Building is illuminated. A classic example would be the flag which flies from the Capitol Building in Washington, continuously.

Again, Mr. Satterthwaite should be complimented for his concern.

Education letter off base

To the Editor:

The letter entitled "In Pursuit of Education" is based on a very narrow minded perspective. The description of technical and business education is extremely sarcastic, and more than that, it is totally inaccurate.

The disappointing aspect of the letter though is the indication that the author did not gain anything from the liberal arts education that he apparently received. A liberal arts student is supposed to receive a wide variety of education. A person who decides to work on a specific field such as business or technical education realizes that his-her field is in fact concentrated to Major areas of the subject; the emphasis is not on variety.

A liberal arts student realizes that there is a concentration in a major plus much room for additional related and un-related courses. The only conclusion that can be drawn from this letter is that the School of Liberal Arts has failed in its attempt to liberally educate one student.

Bob Driscoll

Picketing — loss of respect

To the Editor:

On May 27 some of my faculty colleagues may be engaging in "informational picketing" during Commencement ceremonies. This will no doubt be the first commencement many of them have attended since being at the University of Massachusetts.

Whatever else informational picketing may accomplish, it certainly will detract from the main purpose of the ceremonies, to honor the graduates who have completed the requirements for their degrees. I would remind my colleagues that the commencement is not a celebration for the administration nor for the faculty. It is for the students and, equally so, for their parents and relatives. This is a "once - in - a - lifetime" event for most of them. Some parents sitting in the stands will be watching the first member of their family ever to graduate from college. While faculty members may regard the affair as a bore at worst and an opportunity to embarrass "management" at best, a lot of students and their relatives will expect an hour or so of solemnity and drama which they can cherish for years.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors will, if it calls for informational picketing, be calling on its members to do something which costs them no more than the unaccustomed inconvenience of attending a commencement exercise. The real cost will be paid by graduates and, particularly, by their loved ones. The union may pick up some support by such unprofessional conduct, but I suspect that it will lose far more respect.

House rejects scandal probe

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House yesterday rejected a version of a special commission to investigate alleged corruption in the state Deparment of Corporations and Taxation, electing instead to increase Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti's powers to continue his probe of the scandal.

The House, after apparently approving the special commission Monday by a narrow margin, reversed itself after about an hour of intense debate by Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch, (R-Beverly) and Taxation Committee Chairman Rep. Vincent J. Piro, (D-Somerville).

It then initially approved on a voice vote Piro's bill to give Bellotti subpoena powers to force department employees to cooperate with him.

Hatch authored the bill to create a five-member commission with subpoena powers to find out why millions of dollars in back taxes have not been collected from politically influential persons and corporations. He said Bellotti had failed to effectively probe the department despite 18 months of effort.

It is unreasonable to expect the attorney general to do the job, said Hatch.

Angry fishermen miss Maine fish

PORTLAND, Maine [UPI] — Southern New England fishermen are decimating the Maine fishing industry by filling federal quotas before the fish migrate north, state fishermen said Monday.

About 75 fishermen, their wives and friends, students, and federal and state officials met at the University of Maine at Portland to discuss — sometimes heatedly — the problems with a proposed Groundfish Management Plan.

Fishermen told Terry L. Leitzell, assistant administrator for fisheries at the U.S. Commerce Department and head of the National Marine Fisheries Service, quotas were destroying the Maine industry.

"We can't survive with all these damned federal restrictions going on," Ray Emerton, a Portland fisherman, said.

Attorney General Joseph E. Brennan said the federal regulations were a matter of concern and causing a major economic disruption in Maine.

Fisherman Tim Conner said groundfish such as haddock, cod and yellowtail flounder migrate north in the spring.

But quarterly fish quotas take effect before the migration and allow southern New England fishermen to fill the national quotas before fish migrate north, he said.

We shouldn't be able to do all the fishing we want in Maine in the month of May because Massachusetts and Rhode Island fishermen have been getting the fish from us, Emerton said.

Soviets refuse child's treatment

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — The parents of a Soviet baby have been refused permission to send the child to Children's Hospital in Boston for medical treatment.

The baby, Jessica Katz, is being kept alive on American-made baby formula not available in the Soviet Union.

A Jewish-American group Monday mailed a two-month supply of the formula, Pregestimal, to Moscow. But the group fears Soviet customs officials will refuse to allow the packages into the country.

The infant's parents, Boris and Natalya Katz, were denied exit visas to Israel three years ago and recently were denied a visa to allow Jessica to visit the hospital.

Jessica has malabsorption syndrome, a potentially fatal condition in which the body cannot digest normal foods. Pregestimal is the only food she can digest.

The baby weighed a healthy 8½ pounds at birth last October, but two months later she developed severe diarrhea. In January she was admitted to a Moscow hospital.

She was released shortly after and now weighs 13 pounds, about 5 pounds less than she should, doctors said. She eats about one can of Pregestimal every two days.

The latest shipment, a two-month supply, was sent by members of the Medical Mobilization for Soviet Jewry and other branches of the Jewish Federation Council.

Jets prevent peace says Brooke

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Edward M. Brooke, R-Mass., thinks the proposed sale of sophisticated military jets to Egypt and Saudi Arabia will make it more difficult to reach a Middle East peace settlement.

Both Massachusetts senators — Democrat Edward Kennedy and Brooke — voted against President Carter's plan to sell the jets to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Kennedy and Brooke Monday voted for a resolution of disapproval, which lost on a 55-44 Senate vote. That signaled a victory for Carter's $4.8 billion deal to sell the sleek aircraft to three nations in the volatile Middle East.

"I am deeply disappointed the United States supported the administration's decision to allow the U.S. to become a major supplier of sophisticated military equipment to Saudi Arabia and Egypt at this time, Brooke said yesterday.

Police toss pot into incinerator

SCARGRO, Maine [UPI] — Authorities tossed nearly 20 tons of marijuana — worth an estimated $16 million — into an incinerator yesterday in an undisclosed location.

Police seized the 600 large bales wrapped in plastic and burlap and a $1 million yacht during a dockside raid at Boothbag on the Damariscota River April 27. Thirty-one people were arrested in connection with what police described as the largest dockside marijuana seizure in northeast's history.

All the defendants pleaded innocent to federal charges of conspiracy and possession of marijuana and no trial dates have been set.

Lt. Reynold J. LaMontagne said each bale was opened and examined before it was placed in the furnace, but some marijuana was saved for use as evidence in the trials of the people who were arrested.

He said the marijuana, which was quite dry, burned rapidly at a rate of about seven bales in 15 minutes in temperatures of more than 18,200 degrees farenheit. State police and federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents remained at the site during the burning.

The marijuana had been kept under heavy guard at the Scarsboro state police barracks since it was confiscated.

'Private Parts — porn or art?

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Within hours after a police raid of an art exhibit called "Private Parts," outraged artists, a city official and even an anti-pornography crusader condemned the police action.

Acting city solicitor Ronald A. Glantz said he would not prosecute the case and he believed the state's new anti-pornography law is unconstitutional.

Glantz said if the law is taken literally "it's time we put underwear on the statues in Roger Williams Park."

The new law makes violations a felony, so it is up to the attorney general's office to decide if he wants to prosecute, Glantz said.

Mary Shaffer, whose work was displayed in the exhibit, was angry with the way officers shoved and swore at artists involved in the show.

Several photographs were bent and glass frames were shattered as the patrolmen tore the exhibits from the walls of the neat gallery here, she said.

Wife of Globetrotter enters guilty plea

NEW YORK [UPI] — The estranged wife of Harlem Globetrotter Meadowlark Lemon yesterday pleaded guilty to simple assault for stabbing the basketball star with a steak knife last month.

The defendant, Willye Lemon, 40, appeared before Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Betty Elleran on a felonious assault charge, but with the agreement of the district attorney's office, she was permitted to plead guilty to simple assault.

She was released pending sentencing June 27.

Police arrested Mrs. Lemon after she stabbed her husband with a five-inch steak knife at 53rd Street and Second Avenue in front of two police officers.

Seven die in Tennessee as fire sweeps hotel

JELLICO, Tenn. [UPI] — An old three-story residential hotel, cited for eight safety violations two months ago, erupted in flames before dawn yesterday.

Seven persons died in the inferno that sent other guests crashing through windows to escape the flames.

Police Chief Charles Bruce said authorities had accounted for the approximately 40 persons — most of them low-income elderly — who rented rooms in the building that was erected about the turn of the century.

"There's still a lot of rubbish that has to be taken out," Bruce said.

Dr. Jessee Walker, deputy medical examiner, said the dead apparently were occupants of the upper floors of the hotel that was cited March 3 by state inspectors for violations including a lack of sound construction, junk in storage areas and a lack of smoke detectors.

"I hate to use the word 'flea bag' but that's about what this hotel was," Walker said. "It was a fire trap."

The victims ranged in age from Iva Brookman, 77, originally of Hammond, Ind., to Jamie Miller, 3. The child's father, James Miller, 22, who had recently come here from Kokomo, Ind., was also killed.

Other victims included J.T. "Hoppy" Hopkins, 57, O.L. Hampton, 62, Nancy Perry, 67, and Harry Earl Gilburth, 38, all of Jellico.

Authorities said 11 people were injured including 21-year-old Marty Burchett who was reported in critical condition after leaping from a third-story window.

George Faulkner, 30, said his wife, Mattie, 25, threw their two children from a window to him after he jumped to an adjoining building and then made the same leap.

The two Faulkner children, Chris 4, and Susan 6 months, were among those hospitalized in satisfactory condition. Mr. and Mrs. Faulkner escaped with only minor injuries.

Bruce said of the victims, "There's very little of them left. It's not very pretty."

Jesse Hodge of the state fire marshal's office said the cause of the fire was uncertain, but authorities did not suspect arson.

Earlier authorities said four persons were missing and presumed dead, but last night officials said they had accounted for three of those and the other name listed as missing was blamed on an error in the hotel registry.

Only outside walls of the brick building remained standing. The inside was a mass of charred brick, concrete and wood piled around twisted plumbing.

Some of the residents fled down a back fire escape and others burst through windows.

Charlie Foster, 55, said he was in bed asleep when he heard someone yell, "Fire! Fire!" Foster jumped through a second floor window, his shirt melting on his back and flames singing his hair, eyebrows and beard.

"Smoke got me all over. I hope I never see anything like it again. That flame was right behind me and I knew it. I had to jump through a window that had broken glass all around it," Foster said.

Another occupant, Joe Dunaway, 21, a Cumberland College student, said he was lying on his bed reading a magazine when he heard someone yell.

"I opened the door and saw all the smoke," Dunaway said. "I hollered for everyone to get out.

"I just can't get all those people out of my mind. It's worse when I lay down and think about it. In some ways, I think I should have done more than I did. But one whiff of that smoke and you would have got that poor old woman out who was in the room next to me."

Ed Puckett, assistant director of the State Division of Motel and Restaurant Inspection, said the hotel was inspected March 3 and given 30 days to correct violations. He said he did not know if the violations were corrected.

Work-study and nonwork-study positions available working for Student Government Association on Course and Teacher Evaluation, research, and other special projects. Experience helpful. Application deadline Friday at noon at 420 Student Union.

Maine tribes to discuss land negotiations

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Indian negotiators, deeply frustrated by unproductive talks and unsure they may continue to seek a settlement of tribal land claims, yesterday disbanded and went home to consult with their superiors.

The eight-member negotiating committee voted unanimously yesterday to disband so they could return to their reservations and meet with tribal councils to see if they have authority to negotiate past the May 10 deadline which state and federal officials ignored.

The Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes claim roughly the northern two-thirds of Maine, more than 1 million acres, were taken from them more than 50 years ago in violation of the U.S. Non-Intercourse Acts.

This doesn't mean we aren't willing to talk or seek a negotiated settlement of our claims, Indian Negotiator Robert Newall said in an interview. But if nobody wants to talk seriously there is no point in our being together.

Thomas N. turee, counsel for the tribes, said in the meeting "I will be preparing to proceed with the claims against the state and large landholders. While at the same time I will serve as a conduit for any counter-offers which the state might choose to make."

Tureen said the Indians began seriously doubting the integrity of the state's negotiating effort when Gov. James B. Longley broke off talks last week and asked the congressional delegation to sponsor a bill mandating the federal government to settle for the state.

Members of the tribes have been deeply frustrated by the events of the last three days, especially those of last week, Tureen said.

Gov. Longley's decision to break off talks last week and go to Washington with a plan to transfer the case to the U.S. Court of claims when he knew the tribes opposed the idea and that few if any people in Washington thought it had a chance of passage, made many tribal members doubt whether the state had any intention of joining in a settlement, he said.

The Indian negotiating committee has reached an agreement with President Carter which calls for him to introduce legislation seeking a federal payment of $25 million to settle claims against more than 330,000 small landowners.

The Carter administration set a May 10 deadline for the state and 14 large landowners not affected by Carter's agreement to decide if they would settle with the tribes or fight the claims in court.

Administration officials said they allowed the deadline to slip by because they believed constructive talks were underway.

The tribes asked the state to provide $25 million over 15 years. The large landowners were asked to provide 300,000 acres at 5 dollars an acre and options of an additional 200,000 acres at full market value.

Tureen said the Indians have received no definitive answer to the proposal from the state and the large landowners.

Eight of the landowners, however, last week notified Washington they would not accept the plan

LSO shuts its doors to protest budget cuts

By W.ANDREW SUNDSTROM
Collegian Staff

The UMass Student Legal Services Office will be closed today, but not in observation of some obscure lawyer's holiday. Rather, the staff and governing board of LSO are protesting what they consider to be an unreasonable budget cut on the part of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

LSO, which offers free legal advice and representation to undergraduate and graduate students, had its original budget request of $76,698 cut to an appropriation of $58,748 in the version of the budget which passed the senate Monday night. The final appropriation constitutes a cut of more than $11,000 from the recommendation of the senate budgets committee, but includes a binder to establish fees for student legal representation.

The budget amendment which was adopted Monday night was drafted over the weekend by senate speaker Brian J. DeLima, Treasurer Michael J. Doyle, Budgets Committee Chairperson Alfred Drewes and other senate members. DeLima said the idea of adding an income category to LSO's budget (charging clients) was brought to his attention by LSO attorney Steve Baumohl.

Baumohl admitted mentioning the idea to DeLima, but said he never intended to recommend the idea either on his part or the part of the LSO itself.

The LSO Governing Board voted 7-0-0 last night to support the LSO staff's decision to close the office today to discuss the matter with its clients and other students. Baumohl said the staff, which includes five full-time paid employees, was particularly upset that the decision to move toward charging students was made "in the twelfth hour".

Aviation Reserve Officer Candidate. It's a Navy Program designed for men with one thing on their mind: flying.

Through AVROC, you can become a Naval Aviator, flying the Navy's latest aircraft to points all over the world. Or you might choose to become the other half of the Navy flight team ... a Naval Flight Officer (NFO). When the mission control is passed from the pilot to the electronic tactical controller, the NFO becomes the man in charge.

You're eligible to apply for the AVROC program upon completion of your freshman year at an accredited college or university. Once you're selected, you're enlisted in the Naval Reserve. Then, between your junior and senior years, you attend an eight-week initial training period at Pensacola, Florida ... followed by another eight weeks of Aviation Officer Candidate School after graduation.

Once you've received your baccalaureate degree and completed your two summer training periods, you're commissioned as an Ensign in the Naval Reserve and, as an officer, continue your flight training until you win your "Wings of Gold."

You can be married or single. And any race, creed, or of any national origin. All you really have to be is eager to fly. If you're going to be something, why not be something special?

★ Greeks meet to discuss cooperative problems

Mullens, while refusing to elaborate on the financial conditions of the co-op, insists it is not in a big mess.

But Field, and the director of Greek Affairs, Shannon Ellis, both said the co-op is in some kind of financial mess based on phone calls from businesses, but neither could be specific because they said they don't have access to all the financial records.

The co-op is a private non-profit corporation, independent of the campus, whose daily operations have been managed by Sexton for the last seven years. A board of directors meet at least once a month to review daily operations. The board is comprised of representatives of member fraternities and sororities, two UMass faculty advisors and Ellis.

Campus administrators observing the co-op for the last few years said Sexton managed it on a personal, informal fashion, shuffling monies around to pay for sudden expenses. They said while Sexton's management practices were apparently successful, once the back problems kept him out of work, the records became disorganized and many businesses were not paid for services to the co-op.

One observer also said Sexton was "too nice", because he kept distributing to member houses even though they had not fully paid for the services.

Sexton last night agreed he handled the co-op business in his own way and that it "fell apart" after the back ailment kept him out of work.

University administrators said they aren't quite sure what to do about the co-op, because its legal independence from the campus prevents UMass from subsidizing it. There has been talk among some campus administrators that UMass might oversee a distribution system for the fraternities and sororities, should the co-op fold, but the administrators said they doubt the Greek system would accept University intervention to that extent.

One administrator said businesses that have not been paid by the co-op for their services may eventually begin arranging payment schedules with the individual houses that received the services.

Mullens said last night he does not know when he can organize a co-op board meeting to discuss its future, because members cannot get together during the final exams period this week. There was supposed to be a board meeting last night before Mullens met with house representatives, but no one showed up.

Before the meeting with house representatives a move to private property, some of those meeting told a Collegian reporter to leave.

One representative, upon learning the Collegian reporter is not a member of the Greek community, told him the meeting was "none of your business."

★ Room-to-Move fearful

Kraft stressed that the needs Room-To-Move attempts to meet are "legitimate", and that some recent program modications "seem hopefull". He said there are several recommendations to change the program, one being the setting up of separate task forces to replace the one large program which presently encompasses Room-To-Move. He said the program must be made more efficient.

Room-To-Move began in 1969 with a $90,000 seed grant from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The University picked up the funding in 1972, but has been forced to decrease its operational budget to about $40,000, according to Gordon.

At its start, everyone on the staff of Room-To-Move was paid, but now, according to Bruha, only six of the 25 staff members are paid.

The Undergraduate Student Senate provides $6,000 for Room-To-Move's budget, and was subject to cuts in Monday's budget meeting. However, the group set up tables last week on the Campus Center Concourse and collected "over 1300 signatures and over 400 letters written to the director of health services in support of Room-To-Move," which were presented to the senate, according to Bruha. The budget, he said, was not cut for next semester.

Bruha said, "At Room-To-Move we feel we are professionals in what we do." There are three paid graduate students who work as teaching assistants, and one paid director who is full-time and not a student. These positions are all paid for through health services and work-study funds. There are two paid student positions — that of the assistant outreach coordinator and the assistant pre-service trainer.

★ Knapp plans fall visit

Knapp said he has no idea when interim UMass president Franklin K. Patterson plans to leave office but speculates that he will begin as president sometime in the fall.

"I plan to visit the Amherst campus as soon as possible," he said. When prodded as to when that would be he replied, "Sometime in October."

Prof. Williams, who served as a member of Cornell's Faculty Representative Council (the equivalent to the UMass Faculty Senate), said Knapp worked in close liason with the faculty representative members and was sensitive to their concerns. "However," he added, "Knapp is conservative with funds and if the faculty at UMass are out to get a raise in salary, they may as well forget it."

Knapp said he hasn't any immediate goals for UMass because, "I like to have the facts before getting specific."

But public higher education should provide a real sense of quality, he said, and hopefully, we'll be able to build on that.

Knapp is a 1947 graduate of Syracuse University, and to both his master's and Ph.D. in political science at the University of Chicago.

He taught at the University of New Hampshire from 1953 to 1961 before being chosen dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

He left New Hampshire in 1963 to work with the American Council of Education before assuming his first and administrative position a Cornell in 1968. He became acting provost in 1972, and took over the full-time position in 1974.

BACK AGAIN by K

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17

Born today, you are a courageous individual, drawn into activities with an advanced degree of difficulty and risk. You are well aware of your own limitations, but are inclined to ignore them when challenged. You like to think that wishing will make it so; being proven wrong repeatedly does not dampen your ardor.

You are an independent person and you select as companions people who share your love of independence. You have no desire to rule the roost; indeed, you prefer the challenge of keen and faie competition for the top spot. You enjoy associations with young people of all ages.

It may be that you will establish a niche for yourself in one of the fine arts. Music is a particular love of yours, whether as spectator or participant. You are sports-minded, but only if you are able to take part.

Others born on this date: Maureen O'Sullivan, actress; John Gregory, sculptor.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, MAY 18

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – If you take the drama out of the home situation, there will be little left to interest you.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) -- Your enthusiasm for new projects rubs off on the young. Don't be surprised if they want part of the action.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – Avoid a clash of temperaments on the employment scene. Do what you must, but do it quietly.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – You may gain a reputation for being a recluse if you keep isolating yourself. Take part in group events!

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) -- This is one of those days when you feel alone in a crowd. Do your own thing your own way in PM.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) -- Participate in events leading to advancement in your employment. Don't be afraid to change.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – You can establish an excellent basis for a new friendship now. Don't be afraid.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) -- Constructive criticism can bring you closer to a friend. Observe, listen, speak tactfully.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-June 20) -- Your past training stands you in excellent stead today. Depend upon memory.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) -- Confuse avocation and vocation at your own risk. Work to get ahead or consent to fall behind.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) -- Temper inner confusion with a smile. You may be surprised to discover how much this accomplishes.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) -- Events that seem terribly important this morning prove to be relatively uninteresting this afternoon.

Batmen open ECAC tourney

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It has all the makings of a wild tournament, this ECAC District I playoff.

Four teams, all with the potential to win the entire thing.

Four teams, all itching for the thing to start.

And it will. Beginning Friday and running through Sunday, UMass, Holy Cross, Providence, and Fairfield will battle for the honor of representing the district in the NCAA Northeast Regional Tournament.

The double elimination tourney will kick off Friday morning at 10 a.m. at Holy Cross's Fitton Field, when Holy Cross (22-9-2) Fairfield (19-10-0). At 1 p.m., UMass (20-19) takes on Providence College (17-8).

Following the second game, the losers will battle at 4 p.m.

The beauty of the playoffs is their equality. Each team played each other during the regular season, except for Providence and Fairfield. And each team has taken turns knocking one another off.

"For the first time in a long time, any team can beat anyone else," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "The tourney is really up for grabs."

The Minutemen are truly in the thick of things. Against the three teams, this is the way UMass has played this season: UMass 8, Providence 7; Providence 12, UMass 1; Fairfield 5, UMass 4; Holy Cross 9, UMass 3. But that's deceptive.

Chris Collins (3-3, 3.69 ERA) is Bergquist's choice to pitch the third game. He added that the other pitchers will be used in relief.

"Experience will also help us," he said, "like (Dave) Tewhill and (Mike) Yacyshyn." They may not have great ERAs (6.14 and 7.20 respectively), but their experience will help us."

Jim Lewis (0-0, 6.14 ERA) and Chuck Thompson (0-0, 7.22 ERA in just one appearance) will also be available for bullpen city. Rightfielder Doug Aylward can also pitch if an emergency situation calls for it, but Bergquist said that his firemen give him no cause for concern. He anticipates keeping Aylward in the outfield.

Some of the fine hitters they will have to subdue include good ol' Ron Perry (.397 and a smooth operator in the field), Peter Reppucci (.395), Providence's Ed Bessinger (.395), Mark Fontaine (.379), Holy Cross's Rick Jasinski (.376), Fairfield's Brendan Vane (.361, and Mike Beaudoin (.341).

But again, UMass can counterattack with Doug Aylward (.407 and second in the District), Mike McEvilly (.336 and 31 RBIs), Leo Kalinowski (.320), Mark Sullivan (.315), John Gallagher (.304), George Kelley (.293) and Dave Oleksak (.283).

In addition, Ed Skribiski (.273) has raised his average considerably after a miserable start. Charlie Ciccone, although hitting only .222, has socked four homers in a part-time role, and Mike Stockley, a superb fielder has driven in 17 runs on only 25 hits.

Bergquist plans to keep his starting lineup intact, save for insertion of Kelley as designated hitter and keeping Oleksak at catcher.

The Minutemen could not be entering post-seasoniplay at a better time. They have won 12 of their last 17 games, and are also hitting the ball with authority.

"When we play well, we're equal to anyone," Bergquist noted. "With 19 and 13 hit games, we've been hitting the ball well and we'll perhaps surprise some people."

With five players hitting above .300 and two more above .280, UMass has proven it can swing with anyone. In addition, several players have substantially improved their averages in the last few weeks.

The Minutemen will need that kind of offense, since four of the opposing playoff pitchers are listed among the top 10 in District I.

Fairfield's Joe Cizynski (4-2, 2.07 ERA), Holy Cross's Ed McDonald (7-0, 2.22 ERA and Friday's opposing pitcher), Fairfield's Keith Cato (6-4, 2.64 ERA), and Holy Cross's Rick Jasinski (4-1, 2.66 ERA) will test UMass's lineup.

Sox win, 3-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [AP] — Dwight Evans belted a 400-foot solo home run in the seventh inning, and unbeaten Bill Lee scattered nine hits for his sixth victory as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Kansas City Royals 3-2 last night.

Lee, a veteran left-hander, pitched out of difficulty in the first two innings to become the fourth six-game winner in the major leagues this year.

Loser Paul Splittorff, 4-3, nursed a 2-0 lead into the fifth but walked Fred Lynn leading off and gave up a single to Evans. Bob Bailey brought Lynn home with a long sacrifice fly and Evans, after Frank Duffy sacrificed him to second, scored on a single by Rick Burleson, who was out trying for a double.

Letter to the editor

Columnist unfair to UMass baseball

To Russ Smith:

I am writing this letter to try and redeem the UMass baseball team from humiliation. The humiliation comes from the article written by you in Tuesday's Collegian [May 16, 1978], entitled, "Good-bye good-bye ... " Your comments were based solely on your unfamiliarity with our baseball team and your own dislike for our program.

You stated, "To the baseball team — you make the playoffs but no one watches you on campus — or seems to care. Is it because people tend to believe that the personnel on the team think they are amazing baseball players — when in actuality the chances of them making the pros are slim." Anyone familiar with our program would realize that it would take someone with very little intelligence to make a statement like that. You mentioned no facts or instances to back this up, but just your own prejudice of the program.

After asking every ballplayer on the UMass team if anyone knew you personally, all said no! I have been in the sports program at UMass for four years and have never once seen you talk to any baseball player. To claim that the personnel think they are amazing ballplayers is a completely "stupid" statement, particularly coming from someone who claims he is a sportswriter. When the UMass baseball teams begins practice on Feb. 6th, they all know what they are up against; an indoor facility not very capable of preparing a team for the upcoming season. But without a doubt, the UMass baseball team plays a tougher schedule than any other team in New England.

As for the statement, "Who cares UMass made the playoffs — a lot of people care! I have been personally congratulated by many people for making the playoffs, because they realize what an accomplishment it is. We had a record of ten wins and sixteen losses going into our toughest part of the season, in late April and won 10 of our last 12 games. All those teams, with all that scholarship money; Maine, B.C., etc., will be home reading about the playoffs. And You say "Who cares?". Of course our baseball team is not followed as much as the other major sports, maybe cause of a combination of poor location, poor publicity and certain sports writers, who have never seen a game but can put down the personnel of the team. I think that the accomplishments this year alone can say something about the personnel.

As for your statement that the chances of our players making the pros are very slim, is another statement made with no facts or thought involved. To date, UMass has provided more pro baseball players than other colleges in New England. This year's team alone has four ballplayers which pro scouts have expressed interest. Again, Mr. Smith, I feel you should look into things before you go tampering with your typewriter.

Eldridge: Portrait of the artist at 70 percent efficiency

Alex Eldridge now holds the record for most assists one year (174), most assists in a career (518), and scored a career total of 1,053 points. Eldridge was named to the U.S. Basketball Writers Association Team All New England (District I) first team and was named twice ECAC Division I Weekly basketball team as co-player of the week. He was also named most valuable player in the Connecticut Classics besides being named to the All Tourney Team.

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

"We have seen only 70 percent of the raw talent of Alex Eldridge. In a way he has cheated all UMass fans. One day I hope I'm there to see him perform to his true potential. It will be like an artist creating at his best." — Assistant UMass basketball coach Ray Wilson.

The man they call "Boob." Four years ago Eldridge came to this campus, one of the most sought-after high school guards in the East. In one week he will leave as one of the most dynamic athletes to come to the Amherst campus.

Eldridge is that special kind of athlete who can bring an audience to its feet most every time he performs.

But with all the accolades that he has received, much criticism has tempered it. Questions of Eldridge's attitude in games and practices, his unwillingness to relate to certain other ballplayers, and his relationship as a black athlete to a white coach — Jack Leaman have often surfaced in the four years.

Certainly Eldridge, Leaman, and Wilson were in agreement that the commentary by Boston Globe sportswriter Bob Ryan this past season, which labeled Eldridge as a "space cadet," was a gross injustice to not only Eldridge the person, but also Eldridge the athlete.

"No one has the right to judge a person when he doesn't know him," said Leaman.

"Sometimes the press has a misconceived judgement of just what a "nice guy" is. And when an athlete just doesn't feel like talking after a game, he is judged as being not a nice athlete. Bob Ryan has no idea of what kind of man Alex Eldridge is," said Wilson.

"I have never talked to Ryan," said Eldridge, "but I would like to meet him. What does he know about me if he has never taken the time to talk to me? I've promised myself that before I'm through playing basketball, I will go and meet Ryan personally," said Eldridge.

At the near end of this present season, Eldridge injured knee ligaments, missed three games and was used sparingly in the EAA championships. In one stretch of five games just prior to getting hurt, Eldridge averaged 17.6 points and eight assists per game.

"Before Alex got hurt, he was on his way to having the best year a guard ever had in New England, and that includes Ronnie Perry of Holy Cross," said Leaman.

"Alex has never been a player to look for his points. He always had the ability to score but he always looked for other people. He's an unselfish ballplayer and I have no complaints about how hard he has worked for me," Leaman said.

Wilson compared Eldridge to an extremely gifted painter with a unique personality. "It's easy," said Wilson, "to question his attitude when it's a different attitude other than an average ballplayer. But he is totally concentrated in the game of basketball and has a tremendous desire to react to the crowd and for the crowd to react to him."

"All Alex wants to do is play basketball and have fun. Unfortunately, at this level, it isn't necessarily the kind of fun that athletes can enjoy on a playground," Wilson added.

Eldridge's own strategy as a ballplayer was to "put my man to sleep. I want to give him a false sense of security so I can go for the steal when he's not looking on defense, or go right past my man on offense. I'm quick and strong and want to capitalize on that. That's how I play," he said.

The 6'3", 188 lb. Eldridge categorized his problems at UMass as ones of differing philosphies and also difficulties of communications with the coaching staff.

"One of the problems I found was adjusting to different players with different styles of playing basketball. Y'know, Mike (Pyatt) and Derick (Claiborne) and I were accustomed to playing a certain kind of running game in high school, and we found players up here with other ideas," he said.

"New York City ball is different from New Hampshire, or Upper-New York Ball. In high school, it was easier because everyone knew what was going down and it was easier to mesh," said Eldridge.

Starting in sixth grade Eldridge competed, and soon teamed up with, Claiborne, to lead his junior and senior high schools to city championships, but Eldridge said most of his playing time came in the playgrounds of the South Bronx.

"They were nothing but cement courts, so kids played ball to keep themselves out of trouble. It was here I learned my fundamentals which are so important to me because without them, I can't do anything, he said.

Playing for coach Don Adams of Taft Senior High, Eldridge's role as a guard was to be the ballhandler and play aggressive defense.

Out of hundreds of colleges and universities, Eldridge narrowed his choice to Duke, Villanova, and St. Johns. But because of the impression Wilson made on Eldridge's family and because Claiborne had already decided to come here, and due to the general atmosphere of the university Eldridge chose UMass. However, in the recruiting process, he met Leaman only once and this was to have an adverse affect during freshman year.

"Ray (Wilson) did all the talking and I really didn't meet Jack till the beginning of practice my freshman year. Ray told me the program needed somebody to spark it because it looked kind of dreary," said Eldridge.

"The problem with Jack and me was whether Jack would have the confidence in me to let me have control of the game, and whether I had to go out and prove myself day-in and day-out. There were other things like whether I would have to tuck in my shirt, whether that meant showing disrespect or not," said Eldridge.

When Wilson left UMass to coach Davidson College, Eldridge said he was personally hurt because "Ray was the only coach I could talk to."

This precipitated a feud between Eldridge and Leaman which resulted in Eldridge leaving the team for a few days and being reinstated with a formal press-conference.

"I really thought about not playing basketball again for UMass at that time, and it was dangerously close. The issue was whether I was playing well in practice. One coach said I was, but Leaman said I wasn't. We had reached an impasse."

But since that suspension, things have gradually eased between both Eldridge and Leaman, with each gaining confidence in the other.

"I have learned things from Jack and he has learned from me. He has taught me discipline and patience and I feel Mike, Derick, and myself have brought new feelings about how UMass basektball can be played."

"This year Jack asked me more about who was playing well, and let me do what I wanted to do. I felt more loose this year and that's my game," he said.

Eldridge, Leaman, and Wilson are all in agreement that Eldridge can play basketball in the NBA.

"The question is whether someone is ready to believe in me," Eldridge said.

"I sincerely hope that Eldridge will be drafted by a coach that will blend with his style and personality. I think someone like Lenny Wilkens of Seattle or Tom Sanders of Boston are good choices," said Wilson.

Tournament Bound

Gazelles journey to Virginia

By SHAMUS GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass woman's lacrosse team, seeded fifth in an eight team field, will play host James Madison Coleege in the opening round of the United States women's Lacrosse Association National Championships to be held in Madison Virginia, May 27-29.

Penn State is the number one seeded team in the tourney and Maryland is second. James Madison is seeded No. 4 behind East Stroundsburg, which coincidently is the school the UMass softball team had to beat to advance into the finals. Rounding out the last three spots are No. 6 Delaware, No. 7 Yale, and No. 8 Rutgers.

"I feel kind of fortunate that we drew James Madison", said coach Frank Garahan. "It would have been awfully tough if we drew Penn State or Maryland."

Garahan said the seedings were based on the team's schedules and scores. The New England teams (UMass and Yale) were seeded evenly with the southern teams and the traditionally stronger teams were seeded the highest.

Penn State boasts of the best players in the country in Sharon Duffy. She was the first collegiate lacrosse player to make the National team and has score over 114 goals in three seasons.

Right now, UMass is mainly concerned with the James Madison team which qualified for the tournament by being the state champions. They finished their season 7-4-1, winning their last four. Their last game was done a month ago and their graduation was two weeks ago so most of the players have been practicing on their own. The only tournament team James Madison has faced all year is Maryland, which they lost to 9-2.

Their leading scorer is Jill Heller, a JV player brough up during the season, who scored 25 goals in nine games (they don't keep track of assists down there). Linda Chamblee with 17 and Julie Hull with 16 were the other top goals scorers. They are coached by Janet Luce, who was a member of the number one United States National team.

There is a possibility that UMass may be playing on AstroTurf as one of the three regular fields is covered.

UMass is coming off a successful weekend at Smith College with three wins in three tries, two over club association teams and the other over the New England Collegiate All-Star team, and enter the tourney at 15-0-2.

"I don't think we played as well as we did in the regionals," said defenseman Gayle Hutchinson, who suffered a strained muscle over the weekend. "We played well, but we were tired."

Hutchinson is the only player on the injury list but she has stayed off her ankle for the past few days and is not expecting any difficulties in the playoffs.

Over the weekend, UMass scored 28 goals (9.3 per game) led by center Judy Kennedy's nine tallies. Cari Nickerson also had a season high six assists in one game and Julie Hall had five in another. The defense, with some outstanding play by Robin Jennings, Olivia Lovelace, Kelly Salls, and Hutchinson, Grace Martinelli let up only 13 goals, an average of only 4 goals a game.

Although the final arrangements have not been made, it now appears the team will be leaving on Friday morning (May 26) by vans and arrive over 10 hours later in Madison.

STICK CHECKS: It seems there are lots of people going down for the two days, just in case you're not doing anything ... it will be the last games for seniors Kennedy, Salls, Sue Kibling, Lovelace, Kathy Gipps, Allyson Toney, Fiona McAllister ... I can't believe I've allowed myself to be intimidated by a defenseman. — at least she'll still talk to me ... have some good games, the whole area is watching how you do ...

UMass softball to World Series

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team is getting the wheels in motion to prepare for its first game of the College World Series against top-seeded Southern Missouri State University Thursday, May 25 in Omaha, Neb.

Southern Missouri tied for seventh place in last year's World Series. UMass, in its first year ever at the national championships, is seeded last out of 16 teams.

The Minutewomen qualified for the series by winning all six of their Eastern Regional playoff games, which included a dramatic doubleheader sweep, Monday against Westchester State (Pa.), in the finals at Allantown, Pa.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson, currently in the process of securing plane and hotel reservations for the trip, yesterday said the greatest problem her team will face in the double elimination series will be the speed of western pitchers. Thompson said pitchers from western schools throw much harder than eastern hurlers.

"We'll be relying on defense at the start," she said, "because it'll take a little longer for the offense to adjust to the kind of pitchers we'll be facing."

Thompson said she plans to have her team bunt often to counter the fast pitching. In addition, Thompson said she will use pitching machines and faster male pitchers during practice before the team travels to Omaha. She said the team will be ready to face the quicker pitchers.

"If they (the batters) put their minds to it, we'll do just fine," she said.

Sophomore pitching ace Sue Peters (10-0) is slated to pitch against Southern Missouri. If the Minutewomen win they will face the winner of the game between eight-seeded UCLA and Texas Women's College. If UMass loses the next opponent will be the loser of the UCLA-Texas game.

UMass isn't the only newcomer to the World Series this year, according to Thompson, who said only six teams are returning from last year's field of 16.

Thompson said the western teams regard eastern softball as second-rate.

"We'll show them eastern softball is a lot better than they think. It's been an excellent season, and it's not over yet," she said.

Women's crew to race in Oregon

By LESLIE C. BELLOWS
Collegian Staff

Despite the fact that the Women's Eastern Rowing Championships were cancelled this weekend, the UMass Minutewomen team will travel to Oregon in June to participate in the Nationals.

Leaving the UMass campus at 7:00 a.m., the women arrived in Pittsfield to find a stiff wind blowing over the course. The first qualifying heat, Novice Eights, was scheduled to go off at 8:45 and boats were launched despite the poor conditions. Disaster struck early as Connecticut College drifted onto rocks and lost their rudder causing a delay.

The next heat was brought to the starting line in their place in an effort to maintain the schedule. Trouble occurred here also when, 15 seconds into the race, MIT and Radcliffe crashed, breaking Radcliffe's rigger. A delay of one hour was then announced.

The JV Eight heat was next and although it began one hour behind schedule there were no major accidents. The wind continued to increase in velocity causing scattered white caps on the course. This called for a different racing strategy than had originally been planned but the UMass women took it in stride.

In spite of the rough water the JV's rowed an excellent race beating Dartmouth, Smith and Washington Colleges, but coming in second behind Yale with a time of 7:10.1 qualifying for the Grand Finals. The oarswomen were: Paula Condon (Coxswain), Laura Love, Kathy Bellows, Cindy Soma, Robin Willworth, Sue Witt, Charmaine Wijeysinghe, Sue Massey, and Beth Brennan.

When the Varsity Eight qualifying heats began it was 12:30 and the weather had deteriorated. After much difficulty in getting aligned for the start UMass's heat got underway into a strong headwind and whitecaps.

UMass took the lead in the start but as the full force of the wind struck them, waves began breaking over the sides and the boat filled with water. Undaunted the oarswomen continued on, held off a strong sprint by Ithaca, and came in second to Princeton (7:05.5) with a time of 7:14.8. By beating Ithaca, Radcliffe, Brown, and Cornell the Varsity had also qualified for the Grand Finals.

When it came time for the last, Varsity qualifying heat the weather had gotten too bad and the heat was terminated. A two hour delay was announced, hoping the wind would die down around 4:30, beginning an interminable series of delays and officials meetings.

At 5:00 the race was postponed until 6:00 when only the Grand Finals would be run, and then it was cancelled by 7 p.m. when the Regatta was cancelled. The first time this has occurred since the Regatta's establishment in 1971.

Lafleur sinks Bruins in OT

MONTREAL [AQ] — Guy Lafleur blasted a 40-foot shot past goalie Gerry Cheevers at 13:09 of overtime last night, ruining a spectacular performance by the Boston goaltender and powering the Montreal Canadiens to a 3-2 victory in the second game of the National Hockey League final playoff series.

Lafleur took a pass from defenseman Larry Robinson, wound up at the top of the faceoff circle, to Cheevers' left, and fired the shot that gave the Canadiens a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Cheevers had been overwhelming in facing 15 Montreal shots in the extra period and making a number of outstanding saves.

Boston defenseman Rick Smith, whose penalties led to two Montreal power-play goals in the Canadiens' 4-1 opening game triumph, stoned for his misdeeds with just 4:12 left in the third period, sending a 10-foot shot past Canadiens' goalie Ken Dryden, pulling the Bruins even 2-2.

Montreal's Bob Gainey had snapped a 40-foot wrist shot past Cheevers just 3:36 earlier to put the Canadiens in front.

Defenseman Park, who scored the only goal for Boston in the opener, traded second-period goals with Steve Shutt — who also scored in the opener — for the 1-1 tie
